EFFORT TO SCARE AMERICANS INTO WITHDRAWAL OF WAR VESSELS FROM WAR ZONE

London, June 6-(By the Associated Press)-Archibald Hurri, a well known writer on naval affairs, takes the view that the German submarine operations off the American coast were intended to try to draw American naval vessels from European waters.

"The U-boats," he says, "are having a very hard time. Since the beginning of March the enemy has had more vessels at sea than ever before. The number destroyed has been larger, and the loss in tonnage since the beginning of the year has been steadily reduced. American vessels have contributed materially in producing this result, as the Germans know. If they can ease the almost unbearable pressure of American ships in the European waters by a demonstration off the American coast they will have achieved their main purpose."

"It is intended by the Germans to arrange the plans of the American and British naval authorities for fighting U-boats where they are operating in large numbers and can be dealt with, as experience has shown, with the greatest success. I do not imagine the American public will fall into the snare the Germans have laid, thus exposing their transports and store ships to destruction."

Writers and publishers in Winnipeg cafes, hotels and large boarding houses may be required to furnish the city with certificates of health.

Estate of the late Jacques Parent, M. L. A. of Lethbridge, Man., was valued at $380,672 by the Manitoba provincial treasurer.

HEROIC DEEDS THAT WON THE VICTORIA CROSS

Six new awards of the Victoria Cross are announced, several obviously for acts of gallantry in the battle which began on March 21. One award is for the capture of a Lewis gun from the Germans.

The name that stands out before all is that of Lieut.-Col. O. C. S. Watson, D. S. O., late O. C. Yorks Light Infantry, whose glorious valor saved the line.

A counter-attack had been made against the enemy position, which at the time was held by the 1st Battalion, Yorks Light Infantry, and he led his remaining small reserve to the attack, under intense rifle and machine gun fire.

Outnumbered, he finally ordered his men to retire, remaining himself in a trench, but he was not to be deterred, though he faced almost certain death by so doing. The assault he led was successful, and the enemy position, doubt, saved the line.

Captain (acting lieutenant-colonel) F. C. Roberts, D. S. O., M. C., W. West Yorkshire Regiment, during continuous operations, which covered over twelve days, led his company to capture the enemy's machine gun position, and he was awarded the Victoria Cross for his gallant and successful leadership.

Second-Lieut. (acting captain) A. M. Toye, M. C., D. S. O., M. C., W. West Yorkshire Regiment, during continuous operations, which covered over twelve days, led his company to capture the enemy's machine gun position, and he was awarded the Victoria Cross for his gallant and successful leadership.

When the enemy captured the trench at a bridgehead, he three times re-asserted his position, and he was eventually recaptured by fresh enemy attacks. Later, with a party of battalion headquarters, he led his company to capture the enemy's machine gun position, and he was awarded the Victoria Cross for his gallant and successful leadership.

War Work Speeding Up-Civilian Demands Subordinated, but Needs of Population Cause Insistent Demand-Shortages of Goods and Labor More Plainly Seen

(Bradstreet's, May 25.)

Tightening of conditions in non-essential lines, further speeding up of war work, excellent crop news, and reports that large distributors are selling all the goods they can get after governmental requirements are satisfied, comprise the main features of the week's events.

Because of paucity of supplies at a time when shelves are being cleaned out of medium-priced goods, as the result of heavy buying flowing from abroad, high wages, linked, too, with concern about the likelihood of being unable to lay checkbooks on normal movements to super-industrial closer terms of credit, to enhance profits of those who may have free supplies, to create an air of undue prominence to demand for goods as distinguished from actual ability to get supplies. Here and there one meets with evidence of conservative buying that is born of the fear that prices have advanced too far, and in connection with the so-called wealthy classes are conspicuous. While manufacturing is intended for the usual channels falling behind, and in consequence contracts are being accepted subject to the ability to get raw materials as well as to turn out the finished product. Main power is slower than ever, and in consequence of the orders of the Provost Marshal General, a further shifting of help from non-essential to essential pursuits is a certainty. As deliveries to preferred industries have been improved by increased supplies of railway cars, the big drawback to still larger outputs is the lack of labor. Naturally, ordinance plants, steel mills, shipyards and manufacturers of army clothing are animated in greater degree than other lines. At the same time staple groceries, dry goods and provisions sell well, but in these respects, as in other lines of distribution, the complaint is one of insufficient supplies and fears of further shortages when governmental wants are satisfied. Crop reports, even after the allowances for the inevitable ragged edges, are well nigh flawless, and supplies of early vegetables are abundant, though the situation in this regard is somewhat marred by the fact that transportation facilities are still inadequate to proper distribution. Present prices for visible stocks of cereals gathered from last season's harvest, such as to vindicate the government's policy of price-fixing. From all over the country reports of insufficient housing and increasing rents, but of little building of ordinary structures. While the burden of the object, but, as they were holding out in two improved strong points, Lieut.-Col. Watson saw that immediate action was necessary, and he led his remaining small reserve to the attack, under intense rifle and machine gun fire.

Outnumbered, he finally ordered his men to retire, remaining himself in a trench, but he was not to be deterred, though he faced almost certain death by so doing. The assault he led was successful, and the enemy position, doubt, saved the line.

James Gordon Bennett of the New York Herald was one of the personalities about whom anecdotes cluster until they form almost a literature in themselves. With a newspaper to give wide publicity to many of his preferences, with a wide acquaintance all over the world to pass on curious stories about him and a long life almost every day of which furnished material for new tales, he became probably the subject of more anecdotes than any other American living.

An illustration of his bent for practical joking of an odd kind, which is fresh in the minds of New Yorkers, was his appropriation of the notices, "All the News That's Fit to Print" from the New York Times, and "It Shows for the News That's Fit to Print" from the New York Herald. Harry S. Brown, an editor and writer, who was associated with Mr. Bennett for twenty-five years until 1916, said yesterday: "I passed many persons to find a motive for this, but he did it for pure devilry. It was his idea of fun."

Brown added that back of the many oddities thickly encrusted on the surface of Mr. Bennett's character, as was known to the public, was a stretch of courage and principle which he never showed to better advantage. He said, "In the way he stuck to Paris during the advance of the Germans from the Marne. The government moved to Bordeaux, the Paris Daily Mail moved there, and most of the Paris papers moved away, but the commodore would not budge. He ran so short of printers that he was reduced to getting out a two-page paper. I was then in London and he sent us word that he would keep on printing the paper as long as he had a printer in his employ."

"While I was in the London office we were getting very blue as the Germans advanced from day to day. He learned from our messages how we felt and took us to task sharply, told us that there was no danger of losing Paris, said that the French were gathering strength and that the Germans were falling into a trap. He was a great student of military strategy all his life and he had the situation accurately mapped out. When attempts were made to induce him to leave Paris, he lost his temper and said he would keep on printing his paper until the Germans got there, and if they ever did get into Paris he would keep on printing if they would let him. His example had a great effect on the courage of the people and gave them a hearty respect for Americans. His paper became the rallying point for patriotic Americans."

Forgave Colonel Roosevelt.

"He foresaw that America would get into the war as soon as the Germans opened their submarine policy, and he did his utmost to bring America in sooner. One illustration of how deeply he felt about the matter was the way in which he forgave Colonel Roosevelt, who was very hard for him to do."

Although for years he had forbidden the mention of the name of Colonel Roosevelt in his papers, he was so much pleased with the vigor of the ex-president's pro-war policy that he personally dictated the editorial, called from Europe, in which the Herald expressed respect for the position of ship news reporter. Six Herald men boarded the ship. His name was. It was Julius Chambers. That day Chambers was city editor, a position which he occupied for three months.

Some twenty years ago Mr. Bennett was seriously injured while trying to drive with a coach and four through the arched doorway of his residence in Paris, but recovered fully.

He was the friend of monarchs, the late King Leopold of Belgium, and the late Emperor of Germany, and he was well acquainted with King Edward VII. For the German emperor, however, he appears always to have had an aversion.

His yacht, the Lysistrata, was lying at Beirut one day some years ago when the Kaiser, in the Hohenzollern, and accompanied by several German warships, arrived at that port. The "Commodore" was on shore at the time and as he came back he noticed with a frown that the skipper of his yacht had "dressed ship" in honor of the emperor, as had the master of every other vessel in the harbor.

As the captain met him at the gangway, Mr. Bennett, with a glance aloft, demanded, "What's all that about?" "I thought," replied the captain, "that if you were on board you would order it done."

"Never mind what you thought. Hereafter, when you are in the slightest doubt about what I want done, do nothing. In that way you can always please me. Order those flags down." Then he went on to the bridge and gave the order to steam out to sea.

Atlantic coast crop reports are, on the whole, very favorable. Southern track growers report something like an emerald to decide.
