EXTRADITION PROCEEDINGS AT WOODSTOCK.

The judge—Not an intent to murder, with the extradition treaty.

Mr. Curry—Kelly took the revolver from Burns and if there was any intent he could easily have killed him. If Burns died, it surely could not be successfully contended that it would be murder.

Mr. Connell—Mr. Curry is making a mistake in that this is not a trial of the cause but a preliminary hearing. His honor's position is that of a justice of the peace who should consider whether there was sufficient evidence to send the accused to trial. Mr. Curry's friends party up for trial. Mr. Curry's friends would be all very well before a judge or jury. Even if the evidence were much weaker, his honor had not even discretion. He was bound to commit.

The judge—Kelly is obliged to commit him for trial on a charge of assault with intent to kill.

Mr. Connell—The intent to kill is shown by Kelly's words. Kelly did have the present ability to carry out his threat. The matter of self-defense cannot be set up at a hearing on this occasion.

The judge said a point has not been charged by counsel. It was that no evidence was shown that Kelly was doing an unlawful act. There is no proof this time. Kelly was coming from Canada. Connell asked his honor to commit him for trial on a charge of assault with intent to kill.

Mr. Curry—The intent to kill is shown by Kelly's words. Kelly did have the present ability to carry out his threat. The matter of self-defense cannot be set up at a hearing on this occasion.

IMPROVING CATTLE.

What May Be Accomplished in a Few Years.

One of the gratifying features of the pure bred cattle sales this season is the increasing large number of those engaged in producing commercial cattle who appear as buyers of pure bred bulls, says The Live Stock Indicator. We do not mean by this that they carry the work of improvement still further forward in them. The breeders of common cattle are purchasing pure bred bulls of what may be called the useful kind from the beefsmen's standpoint. The bulls are good individuals and without fault in their pedigrees, and in spite of the increased demand of the season for improved breeding animals the owners of commercial herds are buying their bulls very reasonably. More of them should do so.

FACTS ABOUT ORCHIDS.

Sensational Features and Much Danger in the Lives of Their Hunters—Why They Are After Orchids.

The life of an orchid hunter combines in itself all the most sensational features of exploration in untrodden districts, often infested by ferocious beasts and by even more savage natives, and in many cases highly malarious and disease laden. The rarest orchids are generally found in the most inaccessible spots, and in the densest and most marshy jungles. Even the natives avoid the districts into which the intrepid orchid hunter penetrates in search of his floral quarry.

A few years ago eight orchid hunters met at Tamatave, and then separated in search of specimens. Within a year only one of them survived, and he had spent months in the most pestilential swamps, from which he emerged with his health seriously impaired. One of the others had been captured by native priests, who drenched him with oil and burned him to death.

The expense of collecting the orchids and getting them out at last into the saleroom is very great. For example, a fine orchid is found in a very out of the way part of Colombia. After being gathered the plants are wired to sticks and nailed inside boxes. These boxes are conveyed on a journey of several days to Bogota, whence another six days' journey takes them to Henda, where they are placed on rafts and conveyed down the Magdalena River to Savannah—a fortnight's journey—where the steamer is awaited.

When at last, after a heavy outlay, the consignment reaches England, quite half the specimens will be dead, and in many cases $15 at a given age, a well bred calf at the same age would be worth half as much more. Figure out the increased value that this would put on a year's crop of the individual producers of the cattle, but it would be a public benefit by reason of the standing it would give to the product of the section in the general markets. If the calf that was "just a calf" were worth $15 at a given age, a well bred calf at the same age would be worth half as much more. Figure out the increased value that this would put on a year's crop of the individual producers of the cattle, but it would be a public benefit by reason of the standing it would give to the product of the section in the general markets.

It is important that changes of this kind should be made from time to time, otherwise there will be inbreeding, the stock will deteriorate, and the owner will fall into the error of supposing that improved stock does not pay when in reality the fault is his own. One or more farmers who will pursue this course can in a half score of years bring up their herds to a point where for all commercial beef producing purposes they will be practically pure bred, and every steer that they have sold in the interval will have brought from a third to a half more than common stock would sell for.

Bad Prices For Grass Cattle.

The watching of the cattle markets closely at the principal points recently will notice the slump in prices for common and inferior grades, says The National Stockman. This can be accounted for by the fact that an unusual number of this grade cattle have been put upon the markets, a kind that is never desirable and that is intrinsically very little to the butcher. It would be as unbusinesslike to put green fruit or grain on sale as some cattle that are now coming forward and losses by shippers and producers of this class of stock are not to be wondered at.

The cause for the liberal marketing of these grades is apparent. Dry weather has made a short grass crop in many sections of the country and also gave rise to the idea that the corn crop would be short. Notwithstanding the fact that the market has been rushed their cattle to market regardless of consequences and the result has been a bitter disappointment in prices. It is to be hoped that the recent rains will have the effect of encouraging graziers to keep their stock until it is ready for the market.

Loss of Horses In War.

In every great campaign the loss of horses is enormous. Napoleon's disastrous retreat from Moscow is said to have cost him 45,000 out of 60,000 horses. During the Franco-German war, which lasted from July, 1870, to May, 1871, 941,000 men being engaged, something like 50,000 horses were lost. In a campaign like the South African the loss must be proportionately heavier, since large numbers of the horses succumb to the conditions of life to which they are unused. In the Egyptian campaign of 1882 we found that the climate was far more fatal than the enemy's fire. Half the English horses employed were disabled, and of these 600 died of disease or exhaustion, while only 60 were killed in action. In a cavalry action horses, as the larger targets, suffer more heavily than the men. At Balklava the light brigade, 670 strong, lost 300 horses.
