Under-Currents By The Duchess

pet, looks over to examine the other side of the wall on which she stands, after which she commences her descent. One little foot she slips into a convenient hole in it, and then the other into a hole lower down, and so on and on, until the six feet of wall are conquered and she reaches terra firma, and finds nothing between her and the desired coast of the lovely woods.

With a merry heart she plunges into the dark, sweetly scented home of the giant trees, with a green, soft pathway under her foot, and, though she knows it not, the world before her.

It is an entrancing hour. Nay, it gets to hours and all so full of life and warmth and beauty that she forgets to count time; so that it is only when she has gone a long, long way into the heart of this exquisite wood, and when the sun has travelled very low down in the heavens, and that miles lie between her and Greycourt, that she wakes to the fact that her hands were not formed to carry any more ferns, and that she has lost her way, and doesn't know how on earth to get back to Vera.

She has stopped short in the middle of a broad green space encompassed by high hills, though with an opening towards the west, when this uncomfortable conviction grows clear to her. She is not of the nervous order, however, and keeping a good heart looks hopefully around her.

Her hope has reason. Far away over there in the distance, stands a figure lightly lined against the massive trunk of a sycamore, that most unmistakably declares itself to be a man. His back is turned to her, and he is bending over something, and so far as she can judge thus remote from him, his clothing is considerably the worse for wear. It looks soiled, dusty, and she is sure at all events that he wears leggings. A gamekeeper, perhaps, or a well-something or other of that sort. At all events the sight is welcome as the early dew.

As she leaves said, she is not one of those ill-regulated girls (better known to us in fiction than in fact, be it said to the credit of their sex) who deem every man they meet on lonely road or in sequestered wood to be either a burglar or garrotter out of work, or midnight assassin on strike, or a marauder in general. Therefore she hails this particular stranger with attention, and getting from him such information as will take her back to Greycourt as speedily as possible. Standing upon a mound near her, she places her hands to her pretty mouth, and, with a simple eloquence that cannot be too highly commended, cries "Hi!" to him, at the top of her fresh young voice.

No answer.

Whether the breeze has played traitor or whether the bending figure is of so gross material as to be deaf to this brilliant appeal, who can say? At all events, he never stirs or lifts his head from his task, whatever it may be. Nothing daunted, Crisida returns to the attack.

"Is it really you?" cries he, with unaffected delight, coloring warmly. He has taken off his hat, and is speaking with the most extreme deference, though his eyes are glad and eager and his whole air triumphant.

"It is you, sir," replies reflectively, and as though it is a little unfair to throw all the personalities at her. "So it is," says he, smiling gaily. "You wanted me! I hope you had no call often."

"Very often," smiling too, and jumping off her pedestal. "I thought I should never make you hear, and it seemed a long way to have to go and fetch you. But do you know, I didn't know you were—you."

"No!" rather disappointed. "Who then?"

"A tramp!" She laughs a little. "Wasn't it stupid of me? But in the distance I thought that gray suit of yours" nodding at his coat "was a dilapidated garment covered with dust, however, I'm very glad I've met you."

"Peyton, Tom Peyton."

"Because I have lost my way, and when I saw you, I thought you might be a sort of person . . . us ask to st me on the right way."

"Well, and am I not?" asks he gravely, hat in hand still.

"Do you know it? The road to Greycourt? I don't."

"I do. You have to follow the—"

He stops short, somewhat abruptly.

"I ADVISE EVERY SICK WOMAN"

To Try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"I advise every suffering woman to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for it has done me so much good. I had female weakness, inflammation, pains in my sides and painful periods. I suffered for six years and tried many remedies without benefit. The doctor said I must have an operation. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the newspapers, and since taking it I am cured and have a nice baby four months old. I feel like a new woman, and have recommended your medicine to my friends. I would be glad to have everybody know what your medicine did for me, and if any write to me I will answer all letters." Mrs. MARY CALIGURE, 317 South Main St., Herkimer, N.Y.

Every woman at some period or other in her life may suffer from just such disturbances as Mrs. Caligure, and if there is no interested friend to advise, let this be a reminder that this famous root and herb remedy has been overcoming these ailments of women for more than 40 years. If any complications exist, write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for advice. The result of many years' experience is at your service.

as if a sudden thought had struck him. "After all, it is a tedious way, and complicated. I don't think that I could well describe it. But if you will permit me to go with you, and show it to—"

BERT TROOPS VICTORS
LONDON, March 7.—All the important buildings in Berlin were in the hands of Government troops this afternoon and a good prospect of maintaining order was assured, according to a German government wireless dispatch received here to-night. The number of dead and wounded in the recent fighting exceeds 400, the message adds.

WEIMAR, March 7—Leaders of the German Government here announced to-day that the situation in Berlin gave them no cause for worry. They said that Minister of Defense Noske had sufficient troops to maintain order.

SURROUNDING REDS
BERLIN, March 6.—Government troops began an attack to-day from all sides on the center of the city and made brilliant progress. The attack was for the purpose of relieving police headquarters, which was besieged by sailors and Republican guards, who had gone over to the Government side. A column from the west progressed to within a block of police headquarters in two hours.

It is believed that the column succeeded in relieving the besieged garrison at police headquarters, although military headquarters at 6:30 o'clock tonight had not yet received any information on that point.

THE CASUALTIES
Between 200 and 300 persons were killed or wounded. The casualties were largely among spectators who, despite all warning, persisted in staying to see the fighting. The casualties among the Government troops were comparatively light.

There was very little organized coherent opposition by the Republican guards and Spartan marines. They were caught by surprise without efficient leadership and were unable to check the attack of the well-disciplined Government forces.

AMERICANS ENDANGERED
LONDON, March 7.—When Spartan forces captured the main telegraph office in Berlin on Thursday the members of the American Red Cross mission were endangered in the shooting, according to an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Berlin. Col. Taylor ordered the women with the mission to seek safety in the Palace Hotel.

The American mission to look after the welfare of prisoners in-trenched itself in the Hotel Adlon, behind a battery of machine guns. The battle for the telegraph office the dispatch adds, was the worst Berlin has seen.
