EVOLUTION

The program of modern evolution is simply bewildering in its vastness. It is a panorama so stupendous and varied that no single mind can begin to grasp it.

From star-dust to solar system, from crude, inanimate stuff to living beings; from earth-worm to St. Paul and Shakespeare, from great brute masses of matter to the wonderful thing known as the human intellect with its visions of infinity and eternity.

What must have been the agitation of the first one mentally to grapple with such conception!

How did he contrive to stand before such an idea without literally going mad with excitement?

And who was the pioneer, the real pathfinder, along the way of the evolutionary idea? His name was Titus Lucretius Carus, better known simply as Lucretius.

This wonderful man—and the more he is studied the more remarkable he seems to us—was born in Rome about B. C. 99.

His family was one of the most illustrious in the Eternal City, standing second to none in wealth, social prestige and solid learning, and of this family Lucretius was the most brilliant member.

Born in the lap of luxury, Lucretius might very well have squandered his splendid talent and devoted his time to idleness and dissipation, but the young Roman aristocrat elected otherwise.

Shunning the young idlers who were prepared to make him a loafer and a libertine, Lucretius dedicated himself to study and in the virtuous privacy of his father's house prepared himself for the production of the work that was destined to make his name immortal.

That work, published in the year B.C. 60, when its author was thirty-nine years old, is entitled "De Rerum Natura," or "The Nature of Things." Of this work a distinguished scholar says, "It is perhaps the most powerful and triumphant book ever written, the most magnificent account of Creation that ever flowed from mortal pen."

And yet, not one person in a thousand, perhaps we should say not one in ten thousand, has ever read the work. There is no excuse for this, since there exists for those who do not know the Latin fine translations in the leading living languages.

Some books are written for the mere pleasure of writing, some for fame, and some for money, but Lucretius wrote for none of these things. His sole purpose, it seems, in writing "De Rerum Natura," was that he might enlighten the minds of men and thereby emancipate them from the degrading influence of superstition and fear.

"Free yourselves from all superstition," said Lucretius, "and be rational. Cut loose from the gods and the devils the hells and the tortures. These things are but the result of the nightmare that is born of your ignorance. Stop being afraid. Become intelligent and calm and happy."

He told them that Jupiter and Pluto, Hades and Cerberus, the Gorgons and the Furies, were but the shadows of their ignorant surmises and cowardly fears.

He told them that they were in the kindly keeping of natural laws, which, if understood and obeyed, would bless them every day. "From nothing nothing comes," he declared. "But the world is here, and since it is impossible to get something from nothing, we are obliged to conclude that there never was a time when, in some form or other, the world did not exist."

Creation, he taught, is the eternal transformation of things by natural law. From as low down as we can go right up to the shining summit of things. Nature, through her laws, slowly but surely brings things to pass.

Briefly summarized, the Roman teaching is as follows: Natural law is the highest. Respect it, and it will bless you, scorn it and you will be crushed. Obedience to natural law is heaven, just as disobedience to it is hell. Get knowledge and the knowledge will cost out the fear that paralyzes you and enable you to live the happy life of rational beings.

Such, in substance, is the philosophy of "De Rerum Natura," the work in which Lucretius, the first evolutionist, put down the ideas that Kant, Spencer, Darwin and the rest of the evolutionary school were to repeat after the lapse of twenty centuries.

THE KINGSLEY CENTENARY

Among the centenaries of 1919 is that of the birth of Charles Kingsley, poet, novelist and social reformer. Kingsley deserves to be read these days because the causes for which he fought and for which he wrote fifty and sixty years ago are once again to the front, as they perhaps have not been at any time in the intervening period.

Kingsley's fame in literature has dwindled of late years, dwindled undeservedly because he has a message for men of today, a message they would do well to heed.

What must have been the agitation of the first one mentally to grapple with such conception! How did he contrive to stand before such an idea without literally going mad with excitement? And who was the pioneer, the real pathfinder, along the way of the evolutionary idea?
