GLASS BEVELLING.

PROCESS BY WHICH EDGE IS CUT AWAY AND REFINISHED.

The Plate to be Bevelled Goes from One Wheel to Another Until it is Brought to the Right Polish—Emery, Sand and Wood Wheels Are Used.

Bevelled glass is not new, but it is now far more extensively used than formerly. Twenty years ago bevelled mirrors were comparatively rare; now they are common, and are seen in many shapes and sizes. Bevelled plates, large and small, and both straight and bent, are used for various other purposes. The process of glass bevelling is very simple, but the work calls for skill on the part of the operators.

The plate to be bevelled goes first to the roughing mill, which is a solid, heavy steel wheel about two feet and a half in diameter, set horizontally, and turning at a high rate of speed. The upper face, or top of this wheel, is slightly roughened. Suspended over the wheel is a fed down through a spout in such quantity as may be required to the top of the rough-faced wheel. The grinder holds the plate to be ground in his hands, with the edge to be ground off upon the face of the roughing mill; he shifts the plate along as the glass is ground away. The expert grinder, roughing sheet of glass against the roughing wheel in this manner, will grind a wheel in a perfectly straight line along its inner edge, and he brings the side bevels together with a perfectly true angle at the corners.

In the roughing mill the bevel is wrought to shape but its face rough looking and feeling. In fact, like what it is, ground glass. The plate goes then to the emery wheel, also of steel and set horizontally. Suspended over this wheel is a little hopper filled with emery, the emery feeding down upon the wheel. Upon this wheel the roughing mill is again ground, the plate being held in the same manner by a grinder, and the surface is brought nearer to smoothness.

From the emery wheel the plate goes to the smoothing stone, which is also set to turn horizontally. The smoothing stone, which is of an extremely fine sandstone, is made with its upper surface, that against which the glass is brought, very slightly convex. This stone is finished perfectly smooth and it is so fine-grained that to the touch it seems almost to be polished. A tiny stream of water, enough to keep the face of the stone wet, is made to trickle down upon it, and the glass is held to this wheel just as it was to the others, and here the bevelled edge is brought down to a smooth surface, but not polished. The plate goes then to a polishing wheel made of wood and set to turn vertically; the bevel edge of the glass is held against the edge, or face of this wooden wheel as it rapidly revolves. The face of the wheel is kept wet and constantly supplied with pulverized stone. Upon this wheel the bevelled edge gets its first polish. The glass then takes the final step in the beveling process. It goes to another wheel, also of wood, also turning vertically, whose face is of felt. The face of this wheel also is kept wet and it is supplied with a fine polishing material called from its color, rouge. Here, as at the polishing wheel, the glass is held with the bevel against the edge, or face of the wheel. On the rouge wheel the bevel gets its final polish and finish and the surface of the bevelled edge, which after the first operation, was rough like ground glass, is now as smooth and as polished as the flat surface of the plate.

Great plates that are too big to be held by hand are locked into a frame that can be so moved as to bring the edges to be bevelled against wheels adjusted for the purpose.

What to Do in a Tornado.

Do you live where there are tornadoes? Have you learned to dread the approach of that funnel-shaped cloud that is the herald of disaster?

Here are a few hints that may help you some in your life and property. They are based on facts of which Prof. E. B. Garriott, of the Chicago Weather Bureau, is authority:

Don't feel that you must pen yourself up in an air-tight house. A cyclone is likely to make straight for a tightly closed house and lift it from its foundation. However substantial the structure the confined air inside will invite destruction.

On the other hand, don't feel that you are necessarily doomed just because your dwelling is frail. Open all the windows. Better still, open all the doors and windows both. When the tornado arrives the air will be able to pass freely through the house, and the building will stand.

It is useless to attempt to fly from the approach of a tornado. No one can predict where a tornado will strike. Make up your mind that it is all a matter of chance, and don't waste energy in useless "precautions."

Cyclonic forces are a mystery even to the closest students of natural phenomena. All that is known is that tornadoes travel from west to east and are most frequent in the Northwest and Middle West. In the winter tornadoes form on the Pacific coast and in the Gulf States. The summer tornadoes come out of the Rocky Mountain region.

A Quick Dish for Company.

A real quick dish for unexpected company can be made of the commonest egg. Beat half a dozen—less or more—for ten minutes, then throw them into cold water for one minute, after which remove the shells and put into hot water again. Make a cream gravy of milk, butter and flour, and season well. Halve the eggs and pour over them.

Even after marriage a freeman loves to talk of his own flames.

A MODERN GIANT.

How He Was Conquered by a Tiny But Vicious Enemy.

Toronto, Dec. 19.—Among the older generation of Autumn and Snow Townships, Ontario, no man is better known nor more highly esteemed than William Hall, formerly of London, but now a prominent Toronto contractor. Mr. Hall, in his younger days, was a carpenter. He was also the strongest man in the two townships. All athletic sports were his delight, and in them all he excelled. His reputation as a mechanic was equally high. Some years ago Mr. Hall was caught in a terrific rainstorm, while returning home on foot, along a country road. A portion of which was "corduroy," running through an extensive swamp. In the darkness, he got off the road, and stepped into the mud and mud through which the road was built. He sank to his waist, and only with the greatest difficulty was able to rescue himself. Next morning he was in a raging fever, and he lay in bed for three weeks. He was four inches shorter than the right. Over the result of the exposure, which would have killed half-a-dozen ordinary men, it was several weeks before he was well, and when he left his bed his left leg was a mass of pain and swelling. Even the doctors said, "crippled him for life." Had there been a more extreme type of rheumatism can imagine the tortures he endured. Day and night the agony burned in his head and muscles, making his life a ceaseless round of torment. Doctor after doctor treated him, but all to no avail. He was a man of the bone of the leg; others said nothing could do him any good. The surgical staff of the hospital examined him, and decided he could never be cured. One doctor said he was drawing away a large quantity of thick, stringy, dark-colored blood, heavily impregnated with pus. Even were tried, and scores of "patent medicines" were used, but there was nothing for it but to suffer till the end. Mr. Hall found greater relief than he had ever known in his life. To walk a few yards was hard labor.

One day recently he read of Dr. Arnold's English Toxin Pills, and concluded to try them. He was so much interested in them that his pain grew markedly less. He purchased a further supply of the pills, and used them. As he used so, his suffering ceased entirely, strength and vitality returned to the once ailing and tortured man, and health came back to him in all its vigor.

He is enthusiastic in his praises of Dr. Arnold's English Toxin Pills, which did for him what the doctors and all other medicines had failed to do—gave him the power to walk, gave him freedom from pain, gave him strength, health and energy. He is a healthy man, and he is now a man of the three score and ten years, and as a man's life he is, in many ways, more quickly and sure on his feet than many a man in the full flush of manhood.

Taking these facts into consideration, his complete recovery is the more marvellous. He has retired from the most arduous duties in Toronto and vicinity, yet he is able to do more than give his temporary relief, that different old patients pronounced his case utterly incurable, that the staff of a city hospital failed to find any means of aid for the sufferer, and then remember that a few boxes of Dr. Arnold's English Toxin Pills renewed his life and his health, and whether Dr. Arnold's English Toxin Pills are not deserving of a place in every household. Remember also, that Mr. Hall had given nearly every patent medicine on the market a patient, fair and faithful trial before beginning to use Dr. Arnold's English Toxin Pills, and that not one of them did him the slightest noticeable good.

Then say whether or not we are justified in claiming that Dr. Arnold's English Toxin Pills are the only medicine known to date that is a positive cure for rheumatism. They are the only medicine that kills the germs that cause rheumatism. They are the only medicine that cures the disease. Dr. Arnold's English Toxin Pills, the medicine that cures disease by killing the germs that cause it, are sold by all druggists at 75c a box; sample size 25c, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of 5c price of The Arnold Chemical Company, Limited, Canada Life Building, 42 King-street west, Toronto.

A COUGH LEADS TO A COFFIN.

There's a striking similarity in these two words. Both are to be dreaded. Coughs cost many dollars, whereas 25c. buys a bottle of Four T's and cures the cough in 24 hours. Making the cough unnecessary. Four T's is acknowledged by all to be the best lung remedy in existence. Large bottles 25c. at the Central Drug Store.

A TIMELY WARNING.

Don't Get the Ready Mixed Paint Habit so Common Now.

Juddock—I wish I could lay my hands for a minute or two on the fiend who invented ready-mixed paint. I'll bet he'd never invent any more infernal machines.

Haddock—Why, what's the matter?

Juddock—Old man, you're a friend of mine; let me warn you solemnly, earnestly against ready-mixed paint. It's the most dreadful habit that can fasten on one. Besides if the whiskey, morphine and cocaine habits are innocent eccentricities. You can be cured of them, but of it never. It creeps into your life in the subtle, insinuating guise of economy, but once it fastens its fatal grasp on you, your cheerfulness, your time, your money, your clothes, your home and your family upon its diabolical altar; you—but I can't stop any longer. I must hurry down to White, Lead & Putty's for—

Haddock—Hold up a minute and I'll go along. I want a can of red paint to touch up the garden vases.

Juddock—Don't do it. Don't get it. Die first. Why, that's the very way I began, and you see before you the result! Why, I think of nothing but paint. I dream of nothing but paint. I eat, I sleep, I move and have my being in the fetid atmosphere of paint. The vases looked so well that I went over the porch chairs. Then the floor of the porch itself needed a coat. Next I painted the fence. Since then I have painted the bathtub, cellar stairs, tree boxes, three or four doorsills, the children's playroom and the barn. To-day I begin on the outside of the house, and when and where it will end I don't know and can't guess. It is indeed true as Shakespeare wrote:

Paint—ready mixed—is a monster of so smeary men As to be hated needs but to be seen; Yet seen too oft, familiar with its face, Nothing escapes upon the whole damned place.

Take warning from the paint-ridden wretch you see before you; fool with intoxicants and flirt with narcotics all you want to, but don't, I adjure you, don't touch ready-mixed paint!

Haddock—Humb! It's so awful, why aren't you man enough to quit?

Juddock—Me? Why, it's my wife.

Sure Death.

Biggs—I've got a worthless dog that I want to get rid of.

Boggs—Why don't you lend him to some amateur sportsman who is going on a hunting trip?

Roosevelt's War Speech.

"Col. Roosevelt is very near sighted." said one of the New Orleans boys who saw service at Santiago, according to the Times-Democrat of that city. "and when the hot fighting was in progress his baggage consisted almost entirely of spectacles. Near-sighted people always have an abiding dread of losing their glasses knowing their absolute helplessness without such aid, and I was told by one of the New York club contingent that Roosevelt took particular pains before leaving home to provide against such a disaster."

"He had been in the habit of wearing nose glasses with a black silk cord attached, but the arrangement was entirely unsuited to a campaign, where the glasses themselves would be liable to fall off constantly, and the cord to catch on twigs. So he substituted very large, round spectacles with steel hooks for the ears, and had a dozen pairs mounted. These he planned around his person and equipment, trying to distribute them so no one accident could include them all. One pair was sewed in his blouse, another in his belt, another in his hat, two in his saddle bags and so on."

"At the fight at Gumbasmas his horse was harked by a bullet while held by an orderly and plunged frantically against a tree. Col. Roosevelt came rushing up, all anxiety, and began trying under the saddle flap. 'They haven't hurt the nag, sir,' said the orderly. 'I know,' replied the Colonel, with tears in his voice, 'but blast 'em, they've smashed my specs.'"

Lodge's English.

Senator Lodge, who for some reason prides himself on the purity of his English, was addressing the Senate on the Food Naval personal bill. He had reached a lofty oratorical plane and was telling grandly why he favored the measure, says a telegram to the Chicago Post. He gave many reasons, but the one upon which he laid special stress was "because it will stop the stagnation in promotions."

"Stop the what?" inquired a sharp-voiced Senator sitting near by. The polished Lodge started to repeat the phrase, paused, flushed, and slowly said: "Relieve the stagnation, if it suits the gentleman better."

"It does."

This little passage was carefully omitted from the record.

DROPPED DEAD.

The man with heart trouble never knows when his time may come. When he leaves home for work he may never return alive. He may drop dead on the street, in his pulpit, in his office, over his work bench. Heart disease is no respecter of persons. The Christian minister is liable the same as anyone else.

Rev. C. L. Mundell writes:

"I suffered from that dreadful tired feeling and weakness, and in 1897 I lost my health altogether. I went to one of the best doctors in the state and he said I had heart, stomach, liver and kidney trouble. His treatment did me no good. I tried different kinds of patent medicines but got worse all the time. I walked up hill or a little fast it seemed as though my heart would jump out. I had almost given up all hope, and my money was all gone, was scarcely able to make a living. Finally I wrote Dr. Pierce and following his advice I purchased at my nearest drug store a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and a bottle of his 'Pleasant Pellets.' This was a year ago and now I am having such good results that I am in the enjoyment of perfect health. I am so glad of my health that I cannot say too much. I first began my sincere thanks to Dr. Pierce and then to Dr. Pierce's Pellets."

"I would not do without your Pellets" for one hundred dollars (50c. per bottle). "Do not think I am exaggerating. My statement is true and if any doubt it they can write to Pingree, Ohio, where I live, and if any should think this an assumed name and that such a man as C. L. Mundell does not exist, they may look in the minutes of Providence Association, or in the Boston Year Book in the list of Elders, and they will find my name."

Constipation and biliousness are radically cured by Dr. Pierce's Pellets.
