A Dog in the Manger.

RUTH CAMERON.

"Doesn't it disgust you?" said the Authorman's Wife, "to see a nice thing like that on a creature like her? I declare, it makes me feel like throwing mine away."

She was referring to a nice-looking feather boa around the neck of a woman who, by her red, stubby fingers, her pleasant but rather coarse face and several other unmistakable signs, evidently belonged to what the Authorman's Wife calls "the lower classes."

She Liked It Because Others Couldn't Have One.

No wonder she wanted to throw her feather boa away, since it is evident that the pleasure she finds in it is not in its becomingness or its intrinsic beauty, but in the fact that only people with some money can possess the like.

The unwillingness to see the "lower classes" enjoy themselves and find happiness in every normal, harmless way is one of the meanest dog-in-the-manger traits that I know.

Not long ago, while the Lady-who-always-knows-somewhat and I were visiting a friend in a large city, we took a walk through a section of the country which was just being developed. It has been opened up by a land company, and has been bought by people of the "lower classes," who are building houses upon it. Some have little cottages built by carpenters, others are actually building their own little houses in their spare time.

"It Would Have Made Lovely Estates."

"Isn't it a shame?" said our hostess, "that this beautiful land should go this way? It would have made such lovely estates."

She appealed to the Lady-who-always-knows-somewhat. The latter shook her head. "I'm afraid I can't agree with you. I was just thinking how beautiful it was to see those people building their homes and bringing their children out into the country. I suppose these are the people who would be living in the crowded parts of the city if they hadn't the opportunity and the courage to come out here. I know the architecture isn't beautiful, but I don't know when I've been more touched by anything. It seems as if you could almost feel the love and hopes they are putting into those little houses. And how happy the children are! And see how they are fixing up their little gardens. It really seems something to be thankful for that there should be such a place for the people who haven't money as well as for those who have."

"That's my idea of the right way to feel. It's a terrible thing to think that the good things of the world aren't more evenly divided. Could anything be worse than grudging their share of the pleasure to those who have less than we?"

I bought a horse with a supposedly incurable ringbone for $30.00. Cured him with $1.00 worth of MINARD'S LINIMENT and sold him for $85. Profit on Liniment, $54.

Twelve Sons on Active Service.

The twelve sons of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Skerman, of Ashwell, Herts, are all serving with the forces, eleven being in the Army and one in the Marines.

Herbert, Arthur, Alfred, and Samuel are in the Royal Field Artillery. James, Percy, Jack and George in the Bedfordshire Regiment. Reginald in the Coldstream Guards, and Thomas in the Gordon Highlanders.

Frank, who has been wounded in the North Sea battle, has been for fourteen years in the Royal Marine Light Infantry.

William, the youngest, has just joined up.

Mr. Skerman did not wish any of his sons to claim exemption, and, although 70 years old, is now helping in the hay harvest.

Everyday Etiquette.

"How long should you remain when making a call? When someone else calls and the hostess rises to greet her, should you also rise? questioned Mary."

"When making a formal call you should stay fifteen or twenty minutes, not longer than a half hour. If you are calling on a woman very much older than you are, it would be courteous to rise when she does, but under other circumstances you should remain seated. When another call rises to leave, it is sufficient for you to bow and smile without rising," helped her teacher.

MINARD'S LINIMENT LUMBERMAN'S FRIEND.

Your Boys and Girls.

At all times of the year the baby's skin is very delicate and should receive great care in regard to cleanliness and keeping dry the parts that are likely to become wet, as for example, changing wet diapers at once as soon as they are noticed to be wet. In summer even greater care should be taken in protecting the baby's delicate skin.

A full tub bath in the morning and one or two sponge baths during the day will do much in warm weather to prevent skin troubles in the baby. The bath water should not be too hard. If one is staying in a locality where the water is noted for its "hardness" a bran bag may be used in the water.

The use of soap should be carefully considered. It is usually unwise to put soap on the baby's face. The face should be bathed with a clean wash before the water is allowed to become soapy.

Pure white castle soap is the best kind to use for the baby. If one does not care for this, then some very delicately scented French soap is the next best thing. Never use strong soaps of any kind on babies or young children. Only a little soap should be used on the wash cloth for head body and extremities; then all this should be very carefully rinsed off with a fresh cloth and water. The child should never be dried while the body is still soapy.

Incandescent Gas Lighting.

Possibly, the feature of incandescent gas lighting most frequently noted by casual observers is the great ease with which tasks, ordinarily arduous under artificial light may be performed under the Welsbach gas mantle. The light has a peculiarly "soft" quality, difficult to describe, but which is readily recognized by those who have had experience with the gas mantle lamp.

In its general effect upon bodily health and comfort, the use of incandescent gas lighting is decidedly favorable. The currents of air set up by the burning gas improves ventilation, tending to expel the air vitiated by respiration and draw in fresh air to replace it. Harmful or dangerous disease germs are instantly destroyed in the flame. The extent to which this effect takes place may be verified by placing a gas lamp close to a ceiling without any provision for interfering with the up-rushing air currents. The charred particles which collect immediately above the lamp are the remains of dust particles which before passing through the flames were laden with germs and microbes. Actual experiments have shown that the burning of gas lamps in rooms previously containing bacteria, resulted in absolute sterilization of the air.

Contrary to the popular notion the temperature of rooms lighted by incandescent gas lamps is seldom markedly greater than under incandescent electric light, even under unfavorable conditions of ventilation, while in rooms provided with the ventilating facilities required by the demands of hygiene, the temperature in gas-lighted rooms is frequently lower.

Hr. Grace Notes.

Mr. H. D. Archibald, Mrs. Archibald and their little boy Frank, arrived from Vancouver, B.C., on Monday, and will now make their home here.

Married at Carbonear on January 22nd, by Rev. F. R. Matthews, Mr. James Curtis and Clinton Pynn on Wednesday evening near Western Island Pond. Mrs. Whelan left home on Monday morning to go to her picking alone. Fog set in during the evening she lost her way and wandered farther in the country, and being without food was very much exhausted when found. The boys who were trouting, quickly prepared a cup of tea for the poor woman, and helped her out to the road when Mr. Frank McKee conveyed her home in his motor car. She is fairly well considering her hard experience of three days and two nights in the country.

The ladies of Christ Church Women's Guild intend holding a Strawberry Festival at their hall on Thursday next, Aug. 3rd. This annual affair is always enjoyable, but this year with such an abundance of strawberries it will no doubt be doubly so.

The ss. Bloodhound arrived from Sydney last night with a load of coal to the Coal Co.

Mrs. Duncan Herald and infant are going to St. John's by this evening's train on a visit to friends.

The ladies of St. Paul's Sewing Class will hold their Strawberry Festival in St. Paul's Hall on Tuesday next, Aug. 1st.

The War

Events have marched rapidly late. Such a fact, with the possibility of a rapid progress for the Allies; for events are in their hands and they set the pace. During the past week this progress has had a distinct score on its credit on three of the great fronts of war. The return of the Italians proceeds with gratifying regularity, and that is what we need say of it for the present. In the West, in Russia and in Armenia, the victories of the greatest importance have been won, which we shall briefly in turn.

By gaining final and complete control of Delville Wood and of Pozieres the British may be said to have brought the first stage of the great offensive to a successful issue and have laid the foundations of the second. The very slowness of their advance is the measure of its importance. Every foot of ground has been stubbornly disputed, and every inch won makes the taking of the more easy. Relying not merely on their own constructed defences, but on every conceivable device, but upon the natural defences afforded by the difficult terrain, the Germans have been forced to think that their position well nigh impregnable. We do not expatiate upon the mechanical power and human pluck and capacity which have reduced these fence works and shattered the position which the enemy placed in them. One important observation to make is that it holds out the brightest hope of further and far greater success in the near future. Pozieres and Martinpuich command the road to Bapaume and the high ground on which it stands, or plateau, on which it stands, is still in dispute, but should not have to wait long for final transference to the British. The metaphor of the steamroller is far more appropriate to slow, powerful and grinding advance of the British than to the rapid ing on of the Russians, who are like a flood that has burst its banks. The way to Bapaume will be shorter and straighter line. While the Allies will aim at reaching Bapaume directly, or at first the Peronne is not clear; but the more probable and would realize the latter. The fighting is low on the West front will be in importance.

Meanwhile, even greater have been achieved by the won Russians. They have taken Lemberg is almost certainly do.

Flour Vessel Had Trying Experience

The schooner N. M. White, Capt. Thos. Lowery, sailed into this last evening. She came from Montreal via North Sydney and had a stormy and eventful trip. She was loaded with flour for the Montreal flour laden on May 28th, and just after clearing the St. Lawrence a succession of storms encountered. A most disastrous sea and the wind blew with great violence. The vessel was driven out of course and received a bad buff. Her decks were constantly awash. She sustained much damage. At her canvas was blown away, it made matters worse her rudder carried away and she became practically unmanageable and began to helplessly. It was an anxious for all on board. However, the little craft, rudderless as she was, withstood the heavy weather, and with unabated fury, and Lowery succeeded in making Sydney after a trying experience.

TROUBLE WITH CREW.

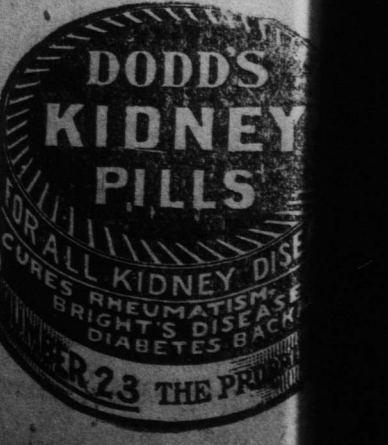

While the vessel was under temporary repairs, Capt. Lowery experienced considerable trouble with his crew. Capt. Lowery sought aid of the law and had matters rectified.

The N. M. White and her flour are consigned to A. H. Provost.
