Responsible Rumanian statesmen are opposed, now as before, to any intervention in Russia, military or other. Hence there can be no question of an alliance based on an attack against Russia. The best proof of it is that the whole story of M. Jonescu's visit to Warsaw is sheer in ention. He has not gone there. MISS DAMER DAWSON. She was convinced that in the new conditions a body of carefully selected, experienced, and highly trained women could be of great service in the streets and other public places, but she could not at that time presee that there would also be a reat demand for them in munition works, where they were invaluable London has long been accustomed to the sight of the smartly uniformed women who patrol the streets or take special duty at big meetings, and it has been bewildered by the appearserve under Scotland Yard (London's headquarters of the detective force). The two organisations are distinct, and when speaking to gatherings of women Miss Damer Dawson used to make it clear that she was dissatisfied with the status and the limited powers which Sir Nevil Macready accorded to the women whom he enrolled. She was a woman of wide experience in other work. Her work for the protection of animals had been recognized by two European Governments. She will be greatly missed by many women's organisations. contracts. A friend from Glasgow who is in very close touch with the shipping and shipbuilding industries tells me that although no owners have to his knowledge yet cancelled their contracts the whole of them are completely "fed up" with what is happen ing. Ships are dear enough to begin with, he says; and when the deliveries are so long delayed as is the case at present the owners are necessarily involved in heavy losses. The best off of the yards are six months behind with their work, and those which are outside of what may be called a steel group are, my friend declares, losing ground every day. The delays in the deliveries of material are, in his opaion, a large cause of the backwardness of the contracts which are in progress. There are of course others which are not in the least degree obscure. Something ought to be done,

THE "SEMI-BETWEEN DRESS."

A woman correspondent writes:-For the woman starting on a foreign holiday this summer, the most important item in the wardrobe is what is quaintly know as the "semi-between dress' suitable either for afternoon or evening wear. Taffeta is the ideal material for such dresses. It always looks right, is smart and becoming and has a knack of appearing from a small suitcase fit to wear at once Jersey dresses are useful for afternoons and take up very little room while charmeuse, crepe de chine and, for warmer weather, flowered voiles made simply with low, rounded, ca square necks, and worn with a smart hat, look well at tea parties or at a theatre in the evening. Shoes an stockings worn with such dresses should be given special attention, as the wrong ones give an air of dowdiass even to the smartest of simpl 90 cents will buy at Small
