There are pictures, too, of the queen's collie dogs, Sharp and Noble, and several views of scenes in the Highlands from sketches by the Princess Beatrice.

In the preface the royal authoress says: Remembering the feelings with which our Life in the Highlands was received, the writer thinks the present volume may equally eveke sympathy, as, while describing a very altered life, it shows how her sad and suffering heart was soothed and cheered by the excursions and incidents it recounts, as well as by the simple mountaineers, from whom she learned many lessons of resignation and faith in the quiet of the beautiful Highlands.

In October, 1863, when making an excursion from Balmoral to Clova, the carriage was overturned. The face and the right hand of the queen were bruised and Brown's knees were badly hurt. The succeeding entries recur to Brown's injury: I was much distressed at breakfast to find that poor Brown's legs had been dreadfully cut at the back of the knees, and he said nothing about it. But to-day one became so inflamed and swelled so much that he could hardly move. The doctor said he must keep it up as much as possible and walk very little, but did not forbid his going out with the carriage. I did not go out in the morning.

In 1871 the queen witnessed the Scotch communion service on Sunday at the Cra-thie church, near Balmoral. She writes: The communion is most touching and beautiful. It impressed and moved me more than I can express. It is impossible to say how deeply we were impressed by the grand simplicity of the service. It was all so truly carnest. No description can do justice to the perfect devotion of the whole assemblage. I longed much to join it. To see all these simple, good people in their nice plain dresses, including an old woman in her mutch, so many of whom I knew, and some of whom had walked far, although they were in deep snow, was very striking." Since 1873, the queen adds, I have partaken of the communion at Crathie every autumn. The communion is most touching and Mitchell writes to Billy Madden, from England, that he will be here early in March, and will give Mike Cleary the first chance. If Cleary does not accept he will challenge John L. On October 3, 1870, the Princess Louise became engaged to the Marquis of Lorne. The event took place, the queen says, during a walk from Glassalt Shiel to Dhu Lock, where Louise had gone with lady Ely, the lord chancellor and Lorne. Louise on returning at night told me. Louise, on returning at night, told me Lorne had spoken of his devotion to her Paul Pattillo Knocked Silly by Jack
Moriarty Last Night,

Lorne nad spoken of his devotion to her and had proposed to her. She had accepted, knowing I would approve. Though I was not unprepared for this result, I felt painfully the thought of losing her. But Moriarty Last Night.

A fair audience attended at Occident hall last night to witness the set-to between John Moriarty and Paul Pattillo. After a few minor events the pugs took the platform, ooth looking in good trim—Pattillo aruculent, Moriarty cool and confident. They were dressed in white knickerbockers, Moriarty wearing a blue-striped guernsey and Pattillo a cardinal one, with the letters P. P. worked on the breast. They doubtless stood for "Pretty Pug." Mark Checkley was chosen referce, and announced that the match would be under Marquis of Queensberry rules, points and endurance to count.

At the call of time both men got down to their work. Moriarty lashed out with his right and landed a terrible blow on Pattillo's jaw, which staggered him. Moriarty followed it up with a terrific upper cut which shook the kinks out of Pattillo's spine and brought the water not of his painfully the thought of losing her. But anturally I gave my consent and could only pray that she might be hepapy.

In June, 1879, the queen records the recipt of the news telling of the death of the young prince imperial; "Brown knocked and came in. He said there was bad news. When I, in alarm, asked what, he replied: "The young French prince is killed." I could not take it in, and asked several times what it meant. Beatrice then came in with a telegram in her hand and said: 'Oh, the prince imperial is killed.' I feel the third of horror now while I write the words. Pattillo's jaw, which staggered him. Moriarty followed it up with a terrific upper cut which shook the kinks out of Pattillo's spine and brought the water out of his eyes. He rallied gamely but when time was called he retired to his corner looking very groggy. When time was called for the second round, he surprised everyone by dashing at Moriarty like a wild cat, and giving him 2 good one on the dead run. Moriarty wheeled and caught his adversary on the neck, knocking him heavily against the wall. After that Moriarty had it all his own way. He banged Pattillo all over the stage and could have knocked him out in one round if he liked. He landed terrible undercuts under the jaw, slugged him on the nose, cuffed him on the ears and punched him in the ribs, knocking the wind completely out of him. Pattillo strained and struggled for breath, only to lose it when he got it, but he kept his temper and fought game.

The excitement during the last round was intense. His friends encouraged Pattillo as much as they could, but it was no use. A stinger on the jaw knocked him silly, and at the close of the match his of the cold experienced there may be a first populating. All the queen's remarks have a direct relation to personal emotions. Even in her allusions to the Egyptian reampaign and the beattle of Tel-el-Kebir her only thought is for the safety of the culke of Connaught. The diary says: "On the eve of the attack I prayed earniestly for my darling child and longed for the morrow to arrive." The next day she gets a telegram announcing the great victory and reporting that the duke was well and behaved admirably, whereupon she says: "I felt unbounded joy and gratitude. I showed the telegram to Beatrice and embraced her warmly, saying, 'What you and pride and cause for thankfulness we have to know that our darling is safe and so much praised!
