Home Rule by any other means than legislation or an attempt at legislation.

Reduced on Gladstene's Death.

He renewed in Cork threats he had uttered in Dublin, giving formal notice to the Gladstonian whips that the nine Parnellite votes are not to be had on any other terms. He discussed with great freedom the chances of Mr. Gladstone's living another two years, or even one. He predicted that upon his death the leadership would fall to Sir William Harcourt, "the avowed and admitted enemy of the general sentiment of Ireland." The English people would then cause to care about Home Rule and the long struggle which Parnell brought so near to victory would have to begin over again. Such are the two Irish forecasts and the two Irish views of the situation created by the British public has been occupying its mind with somewhat miscellaneous interests of which no one, either at home or abroad, has been paramount with the public as a whole. The Matabele campaign has loomed.

quite so large, in spite of that remarkable Ulster gathering in Belfast and some remarkable deliverances by Mr. Redmond in Cork.

England Anxious for Silver Repeal.

The silver proceedings at Washington are, you may be sure, closely followed and the now confident hope of repeal is not here or anywhere in Europe an entirely selfish hope. Few are the competent judges of finance who doubt that the prosperity of the United States depends largely on repeal, or that prosperity there and here are closely connected. Seldom do foreign affairs, if merely political, long monopolize English attention, or do they commonly think of American affairs as foreign.

The Matabele Campaign.

Seems at first sight premature. It is, however, a case of defence not of defiance, and oppearing for war in time of peace.

The so-called Parliament is a defence union, composed of 600 delegates from 170, 000 Ulster loyalists. They meet to perfect their organization, and, perhaps, to rejoice a little over the rejection of Home Rule by the House of Lords. The flower of the population of Ulster is in their ranks and they make no secret of their purpose to resist Home Rule, if need be, to the death. They are well led. They have ample funds. They keep inside the law, and they keep before the people of England the fixed resolve of the Protestants of Ireland not to be ruled by Catholic Celts.

No Music,

Ro Flowers!

No fuss or flummery of any kind are needed to add to the attraction which the great display of Oak Hall clothing in the big new Oak Hall building will afford. The fact that it comprises the largest stock of the most seasonable and fashionable wear for men, youths and boys ever shown together at one time and in one place would make any extra decoration, or any musical diversion, appear out of place.

Oak Hall has always catered specially for the favor of practical people, whose patronage is prized by us as a signal expression of perfect satisfaction with Oak Hall clothing, Oak Hall right dealing and the Oak Hall one-price, and they will prefer the tune of good quality, good style and low prices at our opening to anything that a brass band could do there.
