OUR MAILING LIST.

It is a cause of perpetual pain to us, and the pain affects a most tender spot, to see upon our mailing list the names of so many whom we deemed friends but whose friendship, through negligence or some graver cause, has not been very actively exerted in our behalf. To some the OWL has been sent regularly since its first appearance; to others since the beginning of this year. We have mailed to none but those who we considered would be willing to subscribe, yet in many cases we have been disappointed. Now surely among these many, there must be some who are merely waiting. To those we would say make haste; one subscriber to-day is worth three to-morrow; it is in the beginning that help is needed. But if there are any who are determined not to subscribe we would request them to inform us so that we may build no castles with their subscriptions as a foundation. Now this information may be conveyed in a very simple manner. Simply have your postmaster mark your copy "refused" and return it, though it would be much more appropriate for those who have been receiving the OWL since its appearance to send in their subscription, at least for the back numbers. The message is certainly not a pleasant one for us, but it is preferable to paying a heavy printers bill. There is no need of writing on the wrapper of your copy, as some have done, your reasons for not subscribing; let them be understood, nor is the cover a suitable place for an appreciation of the merits of the OWL or a humorous article on the abilities of its editors. All such intimations will be thankfully received when sent through the proper channels, and will be promptly acknowledged, but we feebly protest that the wrapper of a journal is not a becoming spot for an essay on critical literature or journalistic amenities.

OUR ADVERTISERS.

The almost uniform kindness which we have experienced from the merchants of Ottawa has been a source of great pleasure and assistance in the establishment of our college journal. Now it is but right that those who assist the students in any undertaking should in turn be assisted by them, and we therefore request our student readers to trade with our advertisers and to bring the trade of others as much as possible in the same direction. None but first class houses have been
