

Moffat was present on the occasion, and gave some interesting details of his recent visit to Moselekatse, the great "despot" of Central Africa, who has a force of 14,000 warriors, and whom no one can influence but the venerable missionary, Mr. Moffat has great hope of the Zambesi expedition, believes that eventually an important centre will be found in Moselekatse country, where commerce can be carried on to a large extent by Europeans, and has obtained from that chief permission to establish a mission among the Matabele. Meanwhile Dr. Livingstone has probably long ere this reached Tête, where his native companions were waiting to welcome his return. He would then, in his little steamer, the Pearl, proceed on his exploring expedition up the Zambesi. With Mr. Moffat, we hope the time is not far distant when British influence and British humanity will be extended to every village, every town, every tribe in the interior, and that it may be the means both of extinguishing slavery and cutting of the supplies of the slave dealer.—Nonconformist.
