

Preface

The purpose of this discussion paper is to introduce and explore the emerging nexus of human security and cities, with the objective of generating policy-relevant research. This document does not attempt to establish new policies for the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade (DFAIT) or the Government of Canada. Thus, the views and positions provided by this paper are solely those of the contributors to this research project and are not intended to reflect the views and positions of DFAIT or the Government of Canada.

The Human Security Research and Outreach Program, which is supported by the Human Security Policy Division, would like thank the authors – Maciek Hawrylak, Sarah Houghton, and Robert Lawson – for their efforts. The Program would also to thank the many colleagues and experts for their contributions to this debate through discussions, meetings, and consultations.
