HELENE'S MARRIED LIFE

BY MAY CHRISTIE Copyright, 1920, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate LV .- The Photograph.

To say that I was both startled and terrified, would be to describe my feel- | effort at extrication seemed quite useings mildly, The little hall was very dark. I could not see my assailant's face. I could only feel the close grip of his arms about me, his quick, excited reathing—and sense of the electrically charged atmosphere.

I tried to scream. But the sound froze in my throat. I tried to struggle, but my struggles And then it was, that, to my indig-ation and relief, I heard the voice of Tony say, close to my ear:
"It's only I. Helene darling. Don't be frightened."

The sheer impertinence of the man completely staggered me. This was the second occasion on which he had fightened me in precisely the same am not going to hurt you."

"Don't—don't make a scene, Helene."
