The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

UNDOUBTEDLY, she has some strange notion that she is showing her superiority. That is the only way I can account for her.

I mean the woman who is always finding fault with public servants. She complains of the telephone operator.

She is perpetually running up against rude conductors, and lodging complaints against them.

When she dines in public, she makes it a point to announce in tones that can be heard half way across the room that she never saw such "perfectly wretched service."

It is she who telephones to the post office to complain that the postman lingers at people's doors too much, and her mail is delayed.

And instead of being ashamed of her complaints, she appears to be proud of them with a haughty air which seems to say, "This is what happens to anyone who does not yield me the perfect service to which I am accustomed."

If one does not know her, one gets the idea that she is a woman of power and position, accustomed to being waited on within an inch of her life.

But, whisper, while I tell you a secret. Nine times out of ten it is just the other way around. She abuses "the little brief authority," belonging to her by virtue of her position as one of the public, which these folks are so prone to exercise uncomplainingly, because she is not used to power.

If she were really a woman accustomed to being served she would know that countless complaints are as much an indictment of the mistress's usualty of command good service, as the servant's failure to give it.

If she were really a woman of position she would long ago have learned the forbearance, the patience, the gentleness that comes to all really worthwhile people, who deal much with their inferiors.

And it's the same way, I think, with people who are always complaining of food, conditions or accommodations when traveling. They want to improve upon the really superior to what they are used to.

I remember a girl at college, who was always complaining of what seemed to be the most perfect fare. We fancied she must have been used to a very elaborate cuisine at home. We found out later that quite the opposite was true, and that our table at college must have seemed luxurious compared to that which she was accustomed.

The person who has been accustomed to real luxury usually also has enough real refinement not to attempt to tell about it in this way.

The men or women who try to show their power or superiority by abuse and complaints, would only be amusing if they were not so disgusting, and did not sometimes cause so much unhappiness and trouble.

FALL EXCURSIONS TO MONTREAL VIA I. C. R. With richly wooded Mount Royal in its beautiful autumn tints, the magnificent stores break with fall trade, the theatrical and concert season is in full swing, and the contagious snap in the air so peculiar to the Canadian climate in early October, no more ideal season could be selected for a trip to the Canadian metropolis. And when it is taken into consideration that the rates quoted are less than single fare for the round trip from all points on the railway in the maritime provinces it should certainly provide an attractive program for the Intercolonial to demonstrate its excellent service by the famous through train, the Oceanic and the Maritime Express. Sept. 28, 29 and 30 are the going dates with a return limit leaving Montreal not later than Oct. 16, and it would be advisable to make early application for sleeping car reservations on those popular trains.

FALL EXCURSIONS TO MONTREAL VIA I. C. R. With richly wooded Mount Royal in its beautiful autumn tints, the magnificent stores break with fall trade, the theatrical and concert season is in full swing, and the contagious snap in the air so peculiar to the Canadian climate in early October, no more ideal season could be selected for a trip to the Canadian metropolis. And when it is taken into consideration that the rates quoted are less than single fare for the round trip from all points on the railway in the maritime provinces it should certainly provide an attractive program for the Intercolonial to demonstrate its excellent service by the famous through train, the Oceanic and the Maritime Express.
