

in their paddles and bent their backs scorching fashion, pushing the logs forward at a great speed. The logs kept abreast until after passing the point, the Valdez crew drew ahead and won in a spirited finish by a few inches from the home-charge.

From Wednesday's Daily.

In these stirring times of war the army and navy are to the fore in the thought of the people and when the forces from Misery Point and Esquimaux marched up from the E. and N. station on their way to the sham battle at Beacon Hill the streets were thronged with a vast concourse of spectators, windows, balconies and every available point of vantage being crowded with on-lookers, who viewed the splendid pageant with silent admiration.

The first detachments to leave the station were the men of the Royal Marine artillery and the Royal Marine light infantry with their coats of red. They swung into Johnston street with fixed bayonets, marching very steadily to the music of the old, but ever stirring march, "The British Grenadiers." About a hundred yards behind the landmen came the long column of blue-jackets, headed by their Signal Corps and the band of the Royal White and Blue of the 1st Battalion, United Service, "The Army and Navy Fore-Ver." Three Cheers for the Red, White and Blue of the 1st Battalion, United Service, "The Army and Navy Fore-Ver," as the column proceeded with the swinging step became the target of the Government street. The guns brought up the rear, there being five detachments in all.

To Beacon Hill, where the military parade took place, the city repaired en masse, for popular as are the various sports which have been carried out during the last three days, the "military" occupy a place in the people's hearts which can be supplanted by nothing else.

The selection of Beacon Hill for the scene of the manoeuvres was a most happy one and afforded a larger number of opportunity of witnessing the display than could have been possible at any other point in the city. And the hill looked its best. The broad, well-trodden paths, the green grass, the various tints of the foliage, the clear, defined, making a bright and picturesque scene, and the arrival of the military at two o'clock further added to the scene of the day was an ideal one for the occasion.

It was shortly after two o'clock when the strains of the military band indicated the approach of the main portion of the attacking force. Major Eastman was in command and the command was given as follows: "Forward, march." The naval battalion, consisting of about 170 men, followed at a few minutes later, and halted at the corner of the park. It consisted of 8 companies, four of which were from the 1st Battalion, United Service, and two from the 2nd Battalion, United Service. The commanding officer was Lieut. Ley, with Lieut. Cavley and Lieut. Leake, right and left leader.

It was almost three o'clock when the defending force headed by the magnificent band of the Fifth regiment arrived and moved forward to their position at the foot of the hill. The parade square of the adjutant, Capt. Blagden, showed a total strength on parade of about 170 men.

The company officers were: No. 1, Capt. Munro, Lieut. Forbes and Holmes; No. 2, Major Williams, Capt. McConnon and Lieut. Nattell; No. 3, Lieut. Ribbick, Lieut. Drake, T. Pooley and H. Pooley.

The Second Regiment had meanwhile taken up their position on the other side of the hill. It consisted of two companies, with Capt. Worsnop in command, and Lieut. Tait as second in command. The adjutant, Lieut. Tait, was in command of No. 1, and Major Bennett of No. 2.

The engagement opened with a sharp attack from the guns of the Second Battalion, under which that body advanced by successive companies, and before which the skirmishing line of the Second Battalion fell back. Meanwhile the marine battalion poured several volleys into the First Battalion, which was being steadily driven in under the attack of the First and Second regiments.
