CAYENNE PEPPER USED TO CAPTURE BURGLARS

Thrown Lighted Into Cellar Its Fumes Are Too Much for Two Men.

LONDON, March 4.—Cayenne pepper was used by the Leeds police to effect the arrest of two Russian Jews, who were in hiding.
A shop in the city was entered forcibly on Thursday, and the police, who were summoned, found on the floor an elaborate contrivance for opening safes. While the weapon was being examined the police heard the shuffling of feet in the cellar.
The place was in darkness, and the police, fearing a surprise attack from desperate men, hesitated to approach, and resorted to strategy. A piece of cotton wool, on which had been sprinkled some cayenne pepper, was ignited and thrown into the cellar. Soon afterward a voice called out, "Don't put any more of that stuff in; I've had enough!" and one of the men emerged from the cellar. His companion was also arrested without difficulty.
At the police court yesterday, when the men were charged with house-breaking, Superintendent Lindley said the capture was regarded as an important one. In an adjoining shop was a safe containing £25,000 worth of valuables.

THE BOYS AGAIN.

The boy problem, revived by the Evangelical Alliance, has lost none of its old time difficulties but in St. John is still as far from a satisfactory solution as it ever has been. Judge Ritchie, who is called upon to deal with all the juvenile offenders in this city has evidently devoted some thought to the question and with his limited opportunities is no doubt carrying out theories to the fullest possible extent. But there are other applications of humane principles which might be made under more favorable circumstances, and it is not impossible for a presiding magistrate to bring about these circumstances. The measure success to be found in dealing with boys depends not so much on the system adopted as on the man entrusted with the enforcement of the law. Judge Lindsey, who has made the Denver court famous, believes in reform rather than punishment, and in the eight years of his work there he has sent only eighteen boys to the reformatory. Every one of these lads has walked alone from the court house to the reformatory and not one attempt at escape has been reported. This is simply because of the fact that after a talk with the judge each boy has been convinced that his one chance for an honorable career lies in spending some time in the industrial home. His honor is put to the test, and never once has the plan failed. It is only in extreme cases that the reformatory is decided upon. Every other means of reform is first attempted and by making the lads feel that they are treated as criminals Judge Lindsey has succeeded in accomplishing most creditable results. Each boy who is brought before him is encouraged to better things, and is made to feel that his friends believe in him. Upon leaving court he is provided with a card to be filled out by his school teacher at the end of the week. This card is brought back to the court, and the judge and boy discuss it together. The card system is continued as long as it is felt that any supervision is required, and as a rule the period is brief.
Mr. George H. Martin, secretary of the Massachusetts State Board of Education was the writer of a recent article in the New York Tribune.
Mr. Martin goes back to first principles, and tries to explain what a boy is by nature; that is, what the boy wants to do as a result of inherited instincts from a thousand ancestors. He says: "The boy finds himself under an irresistible impulse to measure himself against every external force, to test every limb, every organ, every function to its limit, and to do this every day. Although he bears no banner, to advertise his thimble, 'Excel' is stamped on his every act. The warning cry of his anxious mother, 'Try not the pass,' is always sounding in his ears, but he tries all the same, if not today, tomorrow. He gains in strength and agility, in power to handle himself—to direct his energy in the most effective way. He comes gradually to learn his limitations—how far he can go in matching himself against the forces of nature, how much is worth while in his struggle for supremacy, what is the margin of safety in the risks he takes. All this is an essential element in successful manhood."
In the country it is comparatively easy for the boy to obey his instincts without trouble. In the city he finds them thwarted on every hand. There are trees, but he must not climb them; flowers, but he may not pluck them. He cannot swim in the water he sees, nor hunt the animals or birds in the park. It is right that he should not be allowed to do these things, but it is also right that he should want to do them. That his natural instincts, thus confined, should burst out sometimes, and indeed, often in wrong and dangerous directions, is only what one might expect. To punish the boy is no cure, and is usually as cruel as it is stupid. It is the duty of the city, Mr. Martin thinks, to give him some wholesome substitute for the brightness of which it has deprived him. If this were done, there would be little need for children's courts. To enter thus to the boy is expensive, but if he isn't worth it, nobody is.

NOT HIS LEGS.

A Russian peasant journeyed to the nearest town to buy himself a pair of new boots, and after probing by the occasion to imbibe plenty of vodka returned home, but soon fell asleep on the road, where he was relieved of his new boots by a passing thief. About an hour afterward a cart came along and the cartier, arousing him, called out:
"Take those legs of yours out of the way, can't you?"
The Russian staggered to his feet, and regarding his legs gravely, said: "These legs aren't mine. Mine have new boots on."

LOOKED LIKE NEW.

Anna Held, whose eyes are famous for their depth and brightness, received one afternoon a pretty compliment from a little boy of five.
The boy, during a matinee, had been brought into Miss Held's dressing room. She wore a Persian gown of lemon-colored silk, and three dogs, smaller than kittens, played on the floor.
The little boy admired the dogs. He admired the actress' robe. He looked with calm admiration up into her face. His eyes delighted him, as a glittering jewel delights a girl.
"Are your eyes new?" he said gravely.

OTHERWISE OCCUPIED.

"Why can't I get my number?" demanded the man.
"Line's busy," replied the telephone girl.
"I don't believe it."
"It's so, just the same. Some cowboys have borrowed it to hang a horse tail with."

SLAUGHTERING ROBINS.

In Central Tennessee are large tracts of cedars, the berries of which serve to attract myriads of robins in the winter. One small hunter in this region sends to market annually enough robins to return $500 at five cents a dozen, equals to 120,000 birds. They are killed at night by torchlight and with sticks.

government will be as expected. Announcement is made that Speaker Robinson will be the new man in the council, his place being taken by Mr. Osman. Mr. Robinson during his term in the chair has won general respect, and his advent to the executive will certainly strengthen that body. Attorney General Pugsley assumes the leadership and this too is the best possible arrangement.

HURBAND BEATS WIFE;

SHE ORDERS JAIL TERM

New Jersey Recorder Permits Spouse to Impose Sentence of 30 Days.

BAYONNE, N. J., Mar. 2.—Sentenced by his wife to thirty days, Joseph Rickley went weeping to jail. Rickley had been brought before Recorder Lazarus for wife beating, and Mrs. Rickley was there to press the case. She declared she had stood his satment for twenty-five years. "You know more about the case than do, Mrs. Rickley, I'll permit you to be my place and pronounce sentence," said the recorder.
"That will suit me," replied Mrs. Rickley. Rickley stared at his wife, and was out to ask for mercy when she said: "I'm no use, Joseph Rickley, to ask me to be lenient. I am going to send you here you will not be able to get any more. I am tired of hearing your omises. You never keep them."
"Marry, be easy with me this time. I will behave myself," pleaded the an, "I will stop drinking and give you my wages."
"It's little good I get from your work," responded Mrs. Rickley. "I think try days in jail will bring you to ur senses."
"Decision sustained," said the recorder.

ORPHAN BRINGS RUIN TO HIS BENEFACTOR

Confesses Crime After Fifteen Years of Poverty and Shame to His Victim.

LONDON, March 4.—Aesop's fable of "the frozen adder" has had a remarkable illustration in a strange story, the final chapter of which was reported yesterday from Gravesend. After lying for sixteen years, under the unjust stigma of robbing his employers, Henry Snelling, formerly manager of the Northfleet and Greenhithe Gas Company, has received a confession from the real thief, a lad named Pearce, who, after being befriended, and who supplanted him.
"I write this as a duty before God," Pearce writes from Canada, "and I am sorry for having been guilty of anything so mean; but the influence of Satan had fast hold of me, and I believe I would have done you all the injury I could, but I hope you will forgive me."
In 1882 Mr. Snelling, who served his articles at Rury St. Edmunds and Edinburgh, came as manager to the Northfleet and Greenhithe Gas Company. Pearce was an orphan, and he provided him with an outfit and taught him the routine of the work. In 1891 the chairman of the company received anonymous letters accusing Mr. Snelling of embezzling money and falsifying the accounts.
He courted the fullest inquiry, and while awaiting the result the office was broken into and the credit book stolen. However, the strictest inquiry failed to disclose anything wrong, and Mr. Snelling was asked to resume his post, but refused to do so and resigned.
A committee of prominent townsmen who believed in Mr. Snelling's innocence was formed for the purpose of investigating the mystery, and it was unable to secure any material evidence, and anxiety and worry resulted in Mr. Snelling being laid low by an attack of congestion of the brain.
Meanwhile Pearce was appointed to the management, but he did not hold the post long, and a year or two after, in 1893, he vanished from Gravesend altogether.
Mr. Snelling recovered from his illness, but the taint of the suspicion seemed to have broken his spirit. He has always had a presentiment that things would come right, but, owing to the suspicion cast upon him, he has walked the town in want of food, and also was struck out of a will, under which he would have received a considerable sum.

That is why people like to buy Golden Eagle Flour.

PRETTY WOMAN, WITH HUBBY'S CASH, ELOPES

Pottsville Pair Arrested in Pittsburg on Complaint ofirate Husband.

PITTSBURG, March 2.—Joseph Koehler and Mrs. Mary Fister, both of Pottsville, are under arrest at Central Police Station, and will be taken back to Pottsville to face serious charges. The woman is the wife of Stephen Fister, and met Koehler several months ago.
They say that they fell in love with each other, and as Mrs. Fister was tired of her lawful spouse, decided to elope. Their plans were completed yesterday, and they left Pottsville together, taking with them, it is alleged, $325 of the hard earnings of Fister.
A watch was kept on all trains, and early this morning Detectives Willis and Crane captured the pair at the Union Depot. The woman broke down and cried piteously.
She begged the officers not to send her back to her husband. Koehler took his arrest stoically, and said that he did not care how soon he was taken back to Pottsville. The prisoners are both about 35 years old, and Mrs. Fister is good looking.

ROMANCES OF A DAY.

Wife is Soothed by Phonograph During Hubby's Absence

Girl Elopes and Weds for Prize of $25— State Capitol Induces Man to Propose and Marriage Follows.

BELLEFONTAINE, Ohio, March 2.—Telling her parents that she was going to spend the day shopping in Cleveland, Miss Blanche McDonald, daughter of A. C. McDonald, superintendent of schools at Roscoe, came here Saturday where she met D. O. Reamer, of Underwood, W. V.

When Miss McDonald previously had referred to Mr. Reamer to her parents for their consent they refused, so an elopement was arranged. Reamer is musical director of a theatrical company playing at Marysville, and last night on the stage at the theatre they were married in the presence of a large audience that had gathered in response to the advertisement that a young pair would be married on the stage for a prize of $25.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., March 2.—Declaring that it was her only comfort since her husband ran away from her to keep a lonely and otherwise cheerless vigil, Mrs. Alice Palmer, of Forty-Fort, today asked the good offices of Alderman Dohohue in regaining for her a phonograph in possession of William Easter, a hotelkeeper.

Mrs. Palmer said the phonograph, in which were recorded the dulcet tones of her recent spouse's voice, had been given to the hotel man by her husband, but that it was not his to give, as she had paid for it with her own money, and that now, since her husband had forsaken her, and his voice no longer makes music in her ears, it is the one thing in which she finds comfort and recreation.

Alderman Dohohue ordered that the instrument be returned to Mrs. Palmer.

HARRISBURG, March 2.—Coming to Harrisburg today to see the new Capitol, Harry G. Mackey and Miss Jennie Geyer, both of Chambersburg, returned home this evening husband and wife.

Accompanied by a sister of the bride, they were admiring the architecture of the Capitol from a point in the park, when Mackey suddenly proposed.

Miss Geyer accepted on the spot, and it was agreed that they be married immediately.

Mackey is a man of action, and in five minutes he had his promised bride and her sister quartered at a hotel, while he went for a marriage license.

He got it without delay, and a few minutes later Miss Geyer and her sister were summoned to the office of Recorder Stine, where the wedding ceremony was performed by Squire Martin Zoll.

BARMAIDS FIGHT FOR LIFE; FURIOUS OVER BRITISH BILL

Deputation Will Visit Home Secretary and Tell Him Women are Better for Bars Than Men.

LONDON, March 2.—The thousands of women of all ages who under the name of barmaids tend a large proportion of the saloons and restaurants in this country are angry excited at the prospect of their occupation being compulsorily closed to women. A bill has been introduced in the House of Commons with the object of making the tending of bars illegal for all women except publicans' wives and daughters, and empowering the authorities to refuse a license unless men only are employed.

Although under the bill existing barmaids may, if they wish, continue their occupation until they die, they foresee that the proposed measure, if it becomes a law, will gradually oust them, as the saloon keepers will inevitably employ men for the purpose of keeping on the terms with the licensing authorities. The wrath of the barmaids for the moment is chiefly centered on Home Secretary Gladstone, who, replying to an abolition deputation headed by the Bishop of Southwark, condemned the employment of women in the trade.

The barmaids propose to send a deputation to Mr. Gladstone forthwith to tell him what they think of him. Their arguments are that they are superior to men behind the bar, that they are better able to keep obstreperous customers in order, and that the saloon is a more decent place than those which women control.

They also contend that the liquor trade is a more respectable one than that of the hotel man, and that they are point triumphantly to one of the most famous saloons on the Strand, which lately dispensed barmaids and substituted men, and which lost so much custom that it gladly re-engaged the women.

It is calculated that there are 30,000 barmaids in Great Britain, 8,000 of whom are in London.</
