

Whatever the size or denomination of the organization concerned, if it is legitimately aiming to contribute to the welfare of the men in the armed forces, it has met with the grateful recognition of the government.

Through the operations of the War Charities Act, the public has been protected from improper appeals and recognized organizations have been fortified by the sanction of the government in their public campaigns for funds.