CREDIT DUE TO SOMEBODY Where Did We Get the Right to Borrow In Mathematics?

"Where did we get the right to bor row in mathematics?" asked a man who takes an interest in curious things. "We always pay back-a thing we sometimes fail to do in other relationships in life-but where did we get the right to borrow in the first instance? Take a simple illustration in subtraction: The teacher will tell the pupil to

We pay back promptly, for instead of saying 'two from two leaves nothing, we say 'three from twelve leaves nine.' But by what au-thority do we say this? When did we discover that this method would give us correct mathematical results? That's what I would like to know. Here we have one of the problems which the doctrine of evolution may deal with. I suppose some old fellow in the long ago found that it was necessary to de-vise a method of meeting this math-ematical emergency, so he hit upon ematical emergency, so he introduced the idea of borrowing from one row of figures and paying back to the next, and so met and conquered a very serious difficulty. The idea originated with some one, and to that some one we owe something. Mathematics would be a meaningless science without this con venient plan, just as other things would be useless but for the olever inventions of men who have gone before. There is the thing, for instance, which stands for nothing, the naught, that round symbol 0. It has a history. We know how they calculated before it came into existence. But I will not tell you about it now. I was speaking about the borrowing habit in mathematics, and that is enough to think about at one time. Do you know how and when it origi-

KEYS OF THE BASTILLE.

These Historic Relies of Old Paris

Owned by an American.

The keys which locked the great gates of the Bastille at the time of its fall have been in America for a number of years. For nearly a centucy they remained in the possession of the family of the Frenchman who took them from the famous prison, though they have recently come into the pos session of an Englishman living in Quebec

When the mob stormed the prison on July 14, 1789, a Parisian, Carrier Lechastel, is said to have been the dirst to rush over the drawbridge as it fell. It was he, at any rate, who overtook a fleeing jailer and took the keys from him. The mob immediately stuck the keys on the end of a spike, and an ense throng paraded with them through the streets. They were considered one of the most valuable trophies of the revolution.

Lechastel kept the keys, and they remained in his family until 1859, when a descendant of the family emigrated to America, taking them with him. Eventually the keys were sold to John Hamilton of St. Louis, who kept them for twenty-five years, exhibiting them from time to time, when they were sold to a Canadian.

One of the keys was obtained in France by General Lafayette and was presented by him to George Washing-ton a year or two before his death. It hangs in the mansion at Mount Vernon and has been seen by thousands of visitors there.

The keys at present are very old and rusty. The largest of them is twelve inches long and is quite heavy. The smallest is of fine workmanship, the socket being shaped like the ace of clubs, and is supposed to have belonged to the treasure rooms. This and another key measure six inches in length, while the other two are about ten inches and much heavier.

Really Antique.

An excellent plaster of paris cast may be seen in one of the Egyptian may be seen in one of the Balleries of the British museum of the famous sycamore statuette known as the "Sheikh-el-Beled," or "Village Sheikh." The original dates from 3900 B. C. and is still in perfect condition, although it is the oldest known specimen of wood carving. It represents an overseer of the workmen engaged in building the pyramids close to Sakkarao, where it was discovered.

Killing Sharks by Electricity.

In the British navy the engineers have a curious way of killing sharks.

They seal up a dynamite cartridge in an empty can and put the can inside a lump of pork. The pork is thrown overboard on a wire which has been connected with an electric battery. When the shark takes the bait, the engineer presses a button, which explodes the cartridge and kills the fish.

He noticed how frequently you came to see Dolly and scented danger ahead and Dolly and scented danger ahead and simply put his foot down on it, just as fathers have been doing ever since the flood. My dear boy, you've got a bitter pill to take, but you've got to swallow it like a man. You've reached point where two roads fork. It is for you to decide which one you'll take.

"Good, good! Splendid!" Alan stared in surprise. "I don't understand," he said. "She knows—that is, I think she knows how I feel, and I have hoped that"— "Never mind about that," interrupted Miller laconically. "There is a chance for both of you if you'll turn square around like sensible human beings and ook the facts in the face."

"And the other?" asked Alan sharp-

"The other is to follow in the foot steps of nearly every sentimental fool that ever was born and go around look-ing like a last year's bird's nest or, worse yet, persuading the girl to elope and thus angering her father so that he will cut her out of what's coming to her and what is her right, my boy. She may be willing to live on a bread and water diet for awhile, but she'll lose flesh and temper in the long run.
If you don't make as much money for her as you cause her to lose, she'll tell you of it some day or, at least, let you see it, and that's as long as it's wide. You are now giving yourself a treatment in self hypnotism, telling yourself that life has not and cannot produce a thing for you beyond that particular that life has not and cannot produce a thing for you beyond that particular pink frock and yellow head. I know how you feel. I've been there six dif-ferent times, beginning with a terrible long first attack and dwinding down as I became inoculated with experi-ence till now the complaint amounts to hardly more than a momentary throe when I see a fresh one in a train for an hour's ride. I can do you a lot of good if you'll listen to me. I'll give you the benefit of my experience."
"What good would your devilish ex-perience do me?" said Alan impatient-

"It would fit any man's case if he'd only believe it. I've made a study of love. I've observed hundreds of typi-cal cases and watched marriage from inception through protracted lilness or boredom down to dumb resignation or sudden death. I don't mean that no lovers of the ideal, sentimental brand are ever happy after marriage, but I do believe that open eyed courtship will beat the blind sort all hollow and that in nine cases out of ten, if people were mated by law according to the judgment of a sensible, open eyed jury, they would be happier than they now are. Nothing eyer spoken is truer than the commandment, 'Thou shalt have no other God but me.' Let a man put anything above the principle of living right, and he will be miserable. The man who holds gold as the chief thing in life will starve to death in its cold glitter, while a pauper in rags will have a laugh that rings with the music of immortal joy. In the same way the man who declares that only one woman is suited to him is making a god of her, raising her to a seat that won't support her dead, material weight. I frankly believe that the glamour of love is simply a sort of in-sanity that has never been correctly named and treated because so many people have been the victims of it."

ALONG PICCADILLY.

There the Tide of Social London
Flows to the Fullest.
Piccadilly seems cold and blatant by contrast as one charges down it. Yet even here, be the sunshine ever so bright, the visitor is crowned in the pearly haze that tones, attenuates, unifies, most if not all of London, that haze that has tantalized and defeated
how many artists! Even over Piccadilhow many artists! Even over Piccadilly, even over this the most mundane of all London streets, it throws its saving glamour. Indeed the whole splendid gamour. Indeed the whole splendid avenue might serve for a studio, not for its values alone, but for the com-plexity of the types that throng it. It is the quintessence of London, the dis-tillation of all London humanity, to be studied nowhere so narrowly as from a bus top. Perfect Du Mauriers in the original approach, pass by and are left behind or stand in groups looking from the club windows. Phil Mays in the the club windows. Phil Mays in the life swarm beneath one, and characters from Thackeray and Dickens jostle unsuspectingly on the sidewalk. The clubs alone, which never look so thoroughly clubbable as when hastily glanced at from a passing bus, will store one's memory with a bundred. store one's memory with a hundred recognizable types. All England, all the empire, indeed, sooner or later finds Its way to Piccadilly. One cannot pass down it without a sight or some glit-tering, turbaned, alien figure, majes-tically isolated, majestically unheeded. Regent street may claim a grander sweep, and by virtue of its shops a more devoted femininity, but it is along Piccadilly that the tide of social London flows brim full.—Sydney Brooks in Harper's Magazine.

In Russia, where the cold in winter is very intense, the markets are very curious things. The meat is frozen, the carcasses of dead animals, as sheep and pigs, stand upright outside the stalls; everything, even game and poultry, requires to be thawed before it can be cooked, and the market people's dress is as picturesque as it is warm and comfortable.

Then the rivers are frozen over all ple live chiefly by hunting and fishing, and the fur of the Russian animals is very beautiful—the ermine, fox, sable, sea ofter and others.

At the end of the winter, when the snow melts, the huntsman pursues the elk, wearing long shoes, in which he can glide over the snow very quickly, while the poor elk sinks into the snow deeper and deeper every step and is at last overtaken and killed

"They didn't look that way," said the merchant.

"But they are," replied the clerk, The merchant persisted that the cloaks would sell, but they didn't. In desperation he returned them to New York to be disposed of to best advantage. On his next trip to New York he again visited an auction house and bought a lot of cloaks. When he returned home and examined his purchase he saw that he had bought the same lot as before.

The Bird Moncpolist As is generally known, the cuckoo lays its eggs in the nests of other birds, leaving them to be hatched and the young cuckoos reared by their foster parents. The young cuckoo throws the other birds out of the nest and gets all the care itself. After murdering its foster brothers and sisters in the most deliberate and callous way it is thence-forth tended with the greatest devo-tion. Long after it has left the nest the great bird, apparently big enough to get its own living and many times larger than its foster parents, is fol-lowed about and fed by them with the same care as when in the nest.
