SHE WAS MARRIED. THE

There was a Quarrel Over the Wedding Gcwn

Which Finally Resulted in a Substitute Bridegroom.

ties often bring to light interesting family tales and traditions. In a paper read before a local society a New England woman recently related an amusing a recdote of a spirited angestress of Revolutionary days.

The damsel, Abigail by name, was loved by twin brothers, Asaph and Asheli but only Asaph had had the courage to propose marriage. Although the girl had been suspected of an inclination for the shier brother, she accepted the more venturesome Asaph, perhaps partly through pique. The wedding day was set, but then a difficulty arose. She was an ardent patriot, he a rather lukewarm one. It was during the very darkest of the war, and it did not appear to her fitting that the marriage should be celebrated with much expedition or dis play. All the money that could be spar ed was wanted to help the cause, while as to the wedding dress, she would no have dreamed of wearing imported finery even if she could have afforded it. She vowed she would be married in home spun or not at all.

Asaph's ideas were different. He was not willing to dispense with either feast ing or fine clothes and desired to make the wedding a grand occasion. A quarre ensued, which ended by his declaring ob stinately that a wife should submit to the authority of her husband and that he should expect his bride to stand up be fore the parson in a silk gown and noth

"A bride, sir, is not yet a wife," was the girl's reply, and upon that they

It was but a few days before the wed ding. During the interval Abigail re-fused to see her lover, sending word that she was busy with the preparation of her wedding outfit. This Asaph complacent ly accepted as evidence of submission to his will. The silk dress was no doubt in hurried process of preparation, the thought.

The day arrived and the hour of the ceremony, but to the groom's anger and confusion his bride appeared before the assembled company in a plain cotton gown, a kitchen apron, her sleeves rolled up and her hands floury from the kneading trough!
"Will you take me as I am?" she asked, with a courtesy.

"Never!" shouted the groom and left the house. Not in the least disconcerted, the fair Abigail smiled invitingly at Ashel, who, plucking up his courage, stepped without a word into the piace vacated by his brother, and they were married there and then. Moreover, they "lived happy ever after," quite in fair; tale style, despite the dubious promise a? forded by the lady's temper. Asaph re-mained a bachelor till his death.—Youth's

VITALITY LIMITS.

No Truth in the Stories of Seed Germination after Thousands of Years.

It is a Well known Fact That Impostures Perpetrated by the f gyptian Who Dispose of These Cereals.

"The statement is trequently made in the popular press," said Professor L. H. Pammel, government botanist, that seeds have retained their vitality for a long time. Thus it is stated that wheat under some conditions has preserved its vitality for 50 or 100 years. It has frequently been stated that wheat taken from Egyptian monuments germinated, but in not a single case is this germination authenticated. Not a single grain taken from an ancient Egyptian sarcophagus and sown by various persons has ever been known to germinate, and the conditions for preserving the seed in these Egyptian monuments are better than in the soil. They are protected from the air and variations of temperature. The experiment which has been most talked of is that of the Count of Sternberg at Prague. He had received the grains from a trustworthy traveler, who told him that they were taken from a sarcophagus. It is said that two of these seeds germinated, but it is a well known fact that impostures are perpetrated by the people who dispose of these seeds. In some cases they have even stripped corn or maize into these sarcophagi.

"Many experiments have been made, not only in this country, but in Europe, to determine the vitality of various grain seeds. Thus, barley retains its vitality better than any other cereal, and this is said to retain its vitality from eight to ten years. In the case of wheat 90 to 100 per cent germinates in from one to four years; in five to seven years, 85 to 87 per cent. In the case of rye the percentage of germination in five years dropped to 55 per cent; in seven years, 36 per cent; nine years, 13 per cent. In the case of corn, I made some experiments a few years ago to determine the vitality and found that corn which was kept in tightly closed vessels at the age of 20 years had lost all its power of germination. Experiments also indicate that corn kept even a few years became largely deteriorated and lost much of its power of germination. Even grass seeds which have been buried at some depth in the soil and in vessels tightly sealed failed to germinate after a dozen or 15 years."-Chicago Chronicle.
