He had long brown curls, wet with the drench rain, and his shrill little voice had a baby lisp. A very stout, elderly wom an, apparently weighing close to 200 pounds, paused at the south side of Market street, and looked askauce at the miniature river of water and at the passing procession of wagons and trollev cars.

The little newsboy was quick to size up the situation. Running up to her, he exclaimed: "Don't be afraid, lady. I'll help you across." Reaching up his tiny little hand, he clutched her by the arm and together the ridiculous pair thread ed their way to the opposite curb. Somerville. Confectioner HACKNEY HORSES.

The hackney or "hach" is pre-emin-ently the road horse of England. It is an artificial style of horse, originating in a cross of thoroughbreds with the heavier mares of the country; but the type has become well established, and a well-bred hackney s'allion, will impress

Care of the Asparagus Hed.

No matter how much care has been given to the proper planting of asparagus, it is easy to injure, if not to render worthless, the best bed by beginning to cut too early, and by cutting too late. In planting, we have advised to set strong, vigorous roots, each with many good strong buds. The future treatment of these plants should be to keep the roots strong, and to keep them, so well supplied with buds that a part of them, or the shoots from them, may be cut away without injury. If we draw water from a cleatern we provide means of realling it. The asparagus root is like a cistern; we draw upon it Care of the Asparagus Red

The tasteful and judicious introduc-tion of fruit and ornamental trees ention of fruit and ornamental rees thances the beauty and value of real estate more than does an equal amount of money invasted in any other way, and it is a form of improvement which should never he lost sight of. But it should never he lost sight of. But it is a mistake to have many trees very coar the house; hey obstruct the light, sun and air too much for health, comfort and beauty. Fifty feet is near enough to the house for large growing trees. Branches should not touch the building, but only cast their shade upon it. If however, large trees are type has become well established, and a well-bred hackney stallion, will impress his characteristics upon his progeny with as much certainty as any purebred horse. Hackneys are all trotters, but are somewhat different in conformation and action from the American standard trotters. The galt is not the long swinging stride seen in this country, but a high knee action, as seen in the opposite illustration of the hackney mare in pasture. They are from fourteen to fifteen and a half hands high, road horses of larger size being known as "cobs." They have fine bony heads, powerful sloping shoulders, clean flat legs, short pasterns, sound feet, deep chested, and strong loins, with spirit and great powers of endurance. According to a high English authority "they combine blood with power, (carrying their twelve stone (188 pounds), and trotting seventeen miles within the hour, or for a shorter spurt their two miles in five minutes. Some of them have won hundreds in trotting natches, and have sold for a thousand guineas each." In England they almost nivariably go under saddle, but with their fine showy actions, bloodlike appearance, and good bottom, there is no reason why they and their grades should not in this country prove equally valuable as carriage or general purpose horses. The valuable race, of should not in this country prove equally valuable as carriage or general purpose horses. The valuable race of means of refilling it. The asparagus root is like a cistern; we draw upon it by cutting the shoots, and we replenish it by allowing the green tops to grow and to form bids to lie dormant. When a new bed has been planted, the advice is given to not cut it until the third or even the fourth year, in order that each root may get so strong that it will stand the annual cutting. The best and most productive bed ever made may be ruined by cutting it to late in the season. For family beds, the addice is given to stop cutting when green peas come. The grower on the large scale for market judges by the character of his crops when to cease cutting. In no other garden c op do we make so permanent an invectment as asparagus; aside from the cost, we invest three years of time and care; but if we manage properly the returns but if we manage properly the returns continue through an indefinite number of years and are paid each spring. No garden should be without an asparagus

The Florida paper notes a marked change in the disposition of fr it grow-ers in that State to confine themselves as closely as they heretofore have to oranges. The "big freeze" warned the settlers that it was not well to carry all their eggs in one basket. The culti-vation of Sea Island cotton has undergone a st. lar chan-e, owi: s to a de-cline in price. Rural industry has be-come more diversified in Florida, and come more diversified in Florida, and in others of the Southern States, and the culture of crops is undertaken, which may prove profitable and may prove merely experimental. The raising of tobacco, the cultivation of the grape, sugar and rice plant ng are urged upon the people, and many have entering of tobacco, the cultivation of the grape, sugar and rice plant ng are urged upon the people, and many have entered into these new fields of enterprise. The paper concludes that tracts of wet land may yet be utilized for the production of rice and sugar; that in Northern Florida cotton and tobacco will be raised in increased quantities; that the "flat lands" offer rare advantages for stock rearing, but that as the greater part of uplands in the State are being divided into small holdings for fruit and vegetable growing, these will prove to be the greatest source of wealth, and furnish the largest volume of exports from the State. A "staple crop" is manifestly the crop that pays best, whether it be cucumbers or cotton, to-matoes or tobacco, and the farmers of any district or region should make the most of what can be most profitably raised.
