REMOVAL OF RUST.

Acid in Cement a Source of Safety in Concrete.

The Scientific American has the following note of interest and importance: "The cause of the disappearance of rust from iron bars, etc., used in the erection of reinforced concrete structures has been traced by Rohland, in Stahl and Eisen, to the presence of acid carbonates and sulphates in the cement, these salts dissolving the iron oxide and leaving the metal bright. The cement in setting absorbs carbonic acid from the air, thus forming the necessary acid carbonates, and experience has shown that the de-rusting process is effected while the concrete is setting and com- mencing to harden. This discovery af- fords an additional guarantee for the safety of reinforced concrete structures, inasmuch as the metal is protected from rusting by the alkaline reaction of the cement during the mixing process, and action of the acid carbonates in an early stage in the erection of the structures.

David Rankin Farms 25,640 Acres of Land.

Sixty years ago a poor Indian farmer boy was married. After the ceremony was over he turned to the parson and said: "Here is five dollars. It is every cent in the world I have. Take it—all I want is an even start in the world."

In the midst of the great Missouri-Illinois corn belt his farm- land and corn are the products. Cattle on all sides sells at one hundred dollars an acre and up. David Rankin has 25,640 acres of such land devoted to raising corn and feeding cattle. Although eighty-four years old David Rankin is light of step, quick of movement and enjoys good health. It is evident that his regular life and moderate living is the explanation. In all his work he is systematic, and runs his many acres on schedule plan. Farming to him is a business, and not merely a way of eking out an existence. From "David Rankin-Plain Farmer," in Technical World Magazine for December.

A very hearty vote of thanks was passed at the conclusion of the address. Worth Knowing.

Farm Horses in Winter

(C. W. Nash in the Canadian Farm.) During the winter months a great many farm horses have nothing to do or are worked very irregularly; this is un- doubtedly the hardest treatment the horse gets. Day after day tied in a stall with all the fodder before him he can consume and no exercise is very apt to bring on some trouble that will re- quire the services of a veterinary sur- geon to remove. Horses when not at work should be turned out to exercise during at least a part of every day, if not too stormy, and their grain diet may be materially, though gradually, cut down and some roots substituted for this. These will be appreciated and will assist in keeping the animals in good health and condition.

Many stables are kept too close under the impression that warmth is the great essential to comfort. Domestic ani- mals readily endure a rather low tem- perature, provided their shelter is dry, free from draughts and satisfactory in other respects. It is more desirable to have pure air in the horse stable than to get a high temperature in winter, with all the accompanying undesirable conditions such as undue content of moisture, car- bon dioxide and other stable gases. Ven- tilation must be carefully provided for; impure air may be most readily removed through the roof, while fresh air may be drawn in from the side at a short dis- tance above the ground. Bad air pre- disposes horse to catarrh and other res- piratory troubles which frequently be- come chronic and end seriously.

A sufficiency of light is very import- ant, for many cases of eye disease are produced by improper lighting. Horses kept in dark stalls frequently have weak sight and from that acquire the habit of shying at common objects on the road- side, simply because they do not see them clearly enough to make out what they are. The change from a dark stall to the brilliant sunlight of our winter days is so violent that the eye suffers. The more light in a stable the better, provided the direct rays of the sun do not strike the horse's face.

The best results are obtained under uniform temperatures, with a pure dry atmosphere, and having the stalls on the north and west sides of the barn rather than on the east and south.

WINTERING COLTS. The longer a foal can have the milk of its dam the better horse it will make. Foals are usually weaned in Oc- tober or November, that is to say, when they are about five or six months old. At this time of the year, pastures are on the wane and the milk supply is fall- ing off. If, however, on account of backward growth, it is considered desir- able that the foal should continue with the dam for a longer period, then both should be allowed an ample supply of grain and chaff, and no great demand should be made on the mare for work. In any case the foal should be fed oats, bran and good hay for at least three or four weeks before weaning, so that the loss of its mother's milk will not be severely felt. As to whether the separa- tion of the foal should be made complet- ily when weaning takes place, or gradu- ally, by allowing it to return to the mare at increasing intervals, is a matter upon which breeders are by no means unanimous, some adopting one course and some the other, with equal success. In the majority of cases, however, the gradual process is the most rational and safer for both mare and foal. A good plan to adopt is to allow the foal to suck twice a day for a few days, and then for some days more, once a day, after which it may be kept from his mother altogether. It should be halter- broken and tied when quite young and frequently handled gently. A roomy box stall with plenty of exercise in the open air daily, furnishes ideal conditions for the proper development of muscle and maintenance of good health and condition.

A good grain ration for the winter consists of crushed oats and bran, three parts oats to one part bran. Weanlings may begin with a quart of this mixture twice a day, which may be gradually in- creased to double that quantity by the end of the season, weanlings and year- olds may be given six to eight quarts in two feeds daily, which, with plenty of good clover hay, and some roots, will keep them in thrifty growing condition. In no case should they be given more than is eaten up clean at each feed, and salt should be always within their reach. Special attention should be paid to the feet of young colts or the hoofs may grow out too long, in which case they may be trimmed back and the outer edge rasped off if neces- sary, so as to secure symmetrical develop- ment and uniform contact with the ground.

During the winter previous to foaling brood mares, if not worked, are better kept in the open yard during the day, provided they have shelter from storms, for to this period exercise is of vital im- portance to them. If worked they should be gently treated and all very heavy or sudden strains avoided. Their food should be liberal and nutritious, but not of a very succulent nature. Too much laxative food has a tendency to weaken the foal.

WINTER RATONNS-ROUGHAGE. There is a firmly rooted idea in the minds of horsemen that oats and timothy hay form the only suitable feed for horses. That it forms a good combina- tion there is no doubt, but the high prices which have prevailed for these feeds of late, have caused a close inves- tigation into the comparative values of various other food stuffs produced at home, with the result that it is now es- tablished that there is no one exclusive grain, or forage ration, which is un- rivalled better than and other for horses, and that several combinations can be fed at less cost than the standard one of oats and timothy. What a man has, however, though he could purchase stuff which would be more economical in the end.

Alfalfa, now extensively grown in the country, is one of the best roughage feeds for horses. Experiments have shown that twelve and a half pounds of alfalfa and two pounds of oat straw, musty silage may cause serious trouble or even death. It has been fed in vari- ous quantities, some feeders obtaining good results from the use of thirty pounds per day. In the majority of cases ten or twelve pounds will be sufficient. Good silage is a perfectly safe forage for horses when fed together with clover, alfalfa or meadow hay.

ROOTS. Roots should constitute a portion of a horse's winter ration and should be remem- bered that on account of the small size of the stomach, horses cannot dispose of as large a quantity as cattle. As a rule, from three to five pounds for colts and six to ten pounds for horses will be found sufficient per day. The feeding of either mangolds, turnips or carrots may be used in the same proportion and either cut or uncut. Sugar beets sometimes cause scoring and many feeders consider one feed a week of them as sufficient.

THE GRAIN RATION. Where light work is required some grain must be fed. Oats, if not too ex- pensive, will do generally well, horse enjoy them, and as compared with other grain they have this in their favor: they may be fed in large quantities without special preparation and without danger to the digestive organs of the animal. Excellent results have been obtained at less expense by using a mixture of middlings 60 lbs., gluten meal 35 lbs., and linseed 15 lbs., fed to replace oats according to the size of the horse and the amount of work done. A ration containing two parts of bran, one part of linseed meal and two parts of oats makes an almost ideal grain ration, the quantity fed of this can be varied to suit all circumstances.

The feeding standard for light winter work is, per day, per thousand pounds: Dry matter 20 lbs., protein 1.5 lbs., car- bohydrates 9.5 lbs., ether extract 0.4 lbs., giving a nutritive ratio 1:7.0.

Chicago Judge Wants Them Given a Chance.

(Pittsburg Gazette-Times.) At the dinner of the Juvenile Court Association of Allegheny County recent- ly Judge Mack, of Chicago, spoke. Among other things he said:
