British Troops Won Solid Victory

Details of Ten Days of Fighting South of Labassee—Fine Individual Deeds Gave the British Several German Trenches.

London, March 16.—The Daily Mail correspondent at British headquarters in France, writing under date of March 13, describes ten days of fighting in the area of what was formerly the Hohenzollern redoubt, to the south of Labassee, now a crowded series of mine craters.

"The fighting," the correspondent says, "has been concentrated and severe, and many have been killed on both sides. The British victory, which was solid, was won by scores of fine individual deeds and has given the British several German trenches.

"Men who fought all through the war have seen nothing comparable with the largest of these craters. It is an amphitheatre, beautifully rounded and covering perhaps half an acre. When the mine was exploded on March 2, observers saw a thing like a great black mushroom rise from the ground. Beneath it appeared, with the ponderous momentum of these big upheavals, a white growth, like the gills of a mushroom. It was the chalk subsoil following in the wake of the black loam. With this black and white upheaval went up, Heaven knows, how many bodies and limbs of Germans, scattered everywhere with the rest of the debris, and the explosion sent up many graves as well as the bodies of the living."

The correspondent gives details of the mining and fighting in this sector, showing that the operations were conducted in snow and slush, and terrible mud, which made the sides of the craters almost impassable.

"Some sank into the morass," he says, "and had to be helped out. Shells falling into the craters sent up eruptions of mud. Only men at a high pitch of training could have stood the physical wearings of this work. No fighting has been so terrible and so condensed as at this crater. The fighting struggle is in a grave yard, which is a perfect target for bomb and grenade, and for the slower attack of an enemy's mine. Intense endurance is necessary to hold your own in such a slough of terror. During the days when the crater was being built for defensive purposes, the dead were being buried as far as possible."

The correspondent pays a tribute to the dash, determination and stubbornness of the enemy infantry, backed by good artillery and an enormous supply of grenades. "The tale of the enemy's losses is high," he says. "One communication trench, packed with men, was raked from end to end by one of our guns until it was a grave yard. Our artillery, overwhelming in the amount of shells, was not spared, we firing at least ten shells to one. The battle is beginning to decline, but is not yet over."

Fads and Fashions.

Plain tight-fitting corsages button down front or back, and have drooping shoulders.

Polonaise dresses have the polonaises of warp-printed taffeta over lace petticoats.

Of separate belts there are many, and they ore going to be worn very much this summer.

Even afternoon dresses and tailormades sometimes have detachable dapery at the back.

For traveling or unceremonious wear generally there is nothing like a little soft satin hat.

The Niniche and other Dolly Varden forms of hat are seen in every collection of hats in Paris.

Taffeta frills arranged on high-crowned millinery is an old world fashion reminiscent of 1870.

Some models, especially of evening gowns, show the pointed bodice effects of the Louis XV. period.

The wing-draped panniers on the skirts can be cleverly arranged so as to make a graceful silhouette.

French suit skirts are most of them very full and simple, but evening dresses are elaborately trimmed.

The long coat is as indispensable as the one-piece frock. It can be three-quarters, seven-eights or full length.

Taffeta, silver cloth and metal lace will be largely used for evening frocks throughout the spring and summer.

Long coats made of light materials will be favored. They have somewhat the effect of a one-piece tailored dress.

Circular veils adapt themselves most accomodatingly to adjustment, especially being thrown over the crown of the hat.

Sometimes a fitted corsage with rippled shoulder capes and tiny peplum is worn with a flowered silk skirt with lace balayeuse.
