MOB "EGGED" NATIONALISTS.

PIETERMARITZBURG, Sept. 5. (Reuter's.)—It had been intended to banquet General Hertog and his party on the evening of their return to South Africa, but at the last moment, owing to anxiety in certain quarters, the arrangements were changed and the banquet was held, instead, in the afternoon. The change was not known generally, and Hertog and the other guests entered without incident, but some inkling of the event must have leaked out, for during the afternoon crowds of workers and others gathered to watch the Nationalist leaders leave the hall. When they did they were pelted with rotten eggs. Hertog himself did not appear, having left the building quietly beforehand. The crowd discharged squibs and sang the National Anthem but eventually dispersed. A proposed nationalist meeting on the market square is now not likely to be held, a view of the feeling among the workers.

BLOP, FRANCE, Sept. 4. Delegates representing one hundred and ten thousand farmers in central and western France in session here to-day protested against measures to reduce the cost of living, "of which farmers are alone victims." They denounced all "measures for fixing prices, real or disguised," and asked that on all committees charged with establishing sale prices of food stuffs farmers should have same representation as consumers.

ENTENTE NOTE TO ROUMANIA.

PARIS, Sept. 5. The note of the Supreme Council which Sir George R. Clark, of the British Foreign Office is carrying to Bucharest, contains cordial language according to "Petit Parisien" to-day. It says that the communication recalls to the Roumanian cabinet engagements that it had entered into, and urges the necessity of their being kept. It is said by the Journal that the clerk is taking with him radiograms which the Roumanian delegation is reported to have sent from Paris to the Roumanian Government within the last two weeks, but none of which reached their destination. As to the new Allied note, the Journal says that it declares that the peace conference considers Roumania as a faithful friend and expresses the wish that its Government may not detach itself from the body. The Allies request an explanation on various points, and ask that Roumania evacuate Hungary speedily and meanwhile cease requisitioning supplies while putting material already at the Allies' disposal for the purpose of making just division of it amongst various nations with claims against Hungary. The note is said to end by asking Roumania to co-operate with the Allies in re-establishing order in Hungary.

A Tribute to Late
Andrew McDonald.

The letter we publish below was recently received in the city by a gentleman, who, knowing the friendly relations that existed between our late Prime Minister, Lord Morris, and the late Mr. McDonald, sent him a cable notifying him of his death:—

12, Maresfield Gardens,
Hampstead, London, N.W. 3.

15th July, 1919.
My dear Friend:—It was most thoughtful of you to send me a cable of the death of my dear old friend, Andrew McDonald. As I read your message memories of nearly forty years crowded upon me. It is now over thirty-five years since I made the acquaintance of our old friend; his death removes the last landmark from the life of that generation of fine and patriotic who fearlessly performed what they conceived to be their duty.

From my first offering for the constituency of St. John's West, Kilbride was one of my strongholds. In the election of 1885 I stood alone on the opposition ticket, and had strong popular opponents and Church and State arrayed against me, but I had loyal true friends whom neither pulpit nor press could sway in their pledged determination of support. I led the poll, I think, by something like six hundred and fifty votes. The Kilbride booth established a record which in no subsequent election was attained. There were eighty-nine votes polled and eighty-nine voters marked their ballots for me. In those days, of course, it was open voting. I had sixty-nine plumpers, and the rest in split votes. That was my first encounter with Kilbride and in the thirty-five years that have since intervened I always secured at least nine-tenths of the votes, and my colleagues associated more closely with Kilbride than with any other part of the District, and while they lived the fathers of the village were warm, close friends of mine. On my first Kilbride Committee, Redmond Aylward, Andrew McDonald, James Doyle, John Finlay, John Mearns and William Sinnott served, the last name being my first Chairman. These became not only friends, but I did all their professional work, drew their will, settled their affairs and followed them to the grave.

In later years the sons followed in their fathers' footsteps, the younger men such as Edward Walsh, Stephen Brennan, Mike Murphy and Pat Brien did yeoman service for me and my colleagues.

The subject of your cable was a remarkable man in more ways than one, gifted with unusual intelligence and marked ability. He was past middle age when I first knew him, and, notwithstanding this, he was Chairman at my last election at Kilbride and his intellect seemed in no way impaired. He made a speech, which, in point of structure and matter, could not easily be excelled. I will remember on my first election we could not obtain the use of the school room, indeed, we received a point blank refusal. The powers that be were all in favor of the other side. Then it was that these old veterans showed their mettle. They harnessed their horses, went to town and brought home large ships' sails, and erected an improvised hall, which was packed at the meeting, with voters from Kilbride and the whole countryside.

I have said Mr. McDonald was no ordinary man. In '89 our political battle was fought between the Liberal party and the party led by Sir Robert Thorburn. As usual, Mr. McDonald was doing great service for the Liberal cause, and brought the war into the enemy's camp by going down and addressing a meeting from his mill-cart in Cliff's Cove, almost within hearing of Sir Robert Thorburn whose office was nearby. I was holding a meeting that evening at Broad Cove, and when I returned I learned of my friend having been incarcerated for obstructing the public highway, having refused the police to abandon his project. I communicated with General Fawcett, and he promptly liberated our hero. I went to the police station, and, with an immense crowd, we led forth the triumphant Hampden to receive the plaudits of the crowd, and escorted him to his home. But now the Heaper has paid his visit, he has pulled his last vote, and fought his last battle, his tollhorn hands rest forever on his fearless breast.

"The breezy call of incense breathing morn,
The cock's shrill clarion
No more shall rouse him from his lowly bed,
For him no more the blazing hearth
Or busy housewife ply her evening care.
No children run to 'tis their sire's return,
Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.
Or did the harvest to his sickle yield,
His furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke.
How jocund did he drive his team afield,
How hurred the woods beneath his sturdy stroke."

He was indeed my ideal "Gillie Hampden" that with dauntless breast the little tyrant of his fields withstood. He required only the opportunity, and he would easily command the "applause of listening senators," but destiny placed him in the more retiring walks of life, where—

"Far from the maddening crowd's ignoble strife,
His sober wishes never learned to stray
Along the cool, sequestered vale of life,
He kept the noiseless tenor of his way."

He was blessed with a long life, passing the span allowed by the Psalmist, and lived to see his children and grandchildren grow up and settle around him, whilst at the same time increasing his store of acres and flocks and herds, and must have died a comparatively well-to-do man. He had more than outlived his generation. He was the last leaf on the tree.

"The mossy marbles rest
On the lips that he had pressed
In their bloom,
And the names he loved to hear,
Had been carved for many a year,
On the tomb."

After I went to live at Beaconsfield in 1890, now nearly thirty years ago,

I rarely came into town on Sundays, and usually went to Mass, Little'sdale, and on fine Sundays at Kilbride. I have often walked back from church with my old friend, and rambled over his farm with him. It was a model farm from the point of crops and cultivation. It was beautifully situated in a hollow of the lovely Kilbride Valley, and surely, if the spirits of the happy dead are permitted to see their abodes in this world, he must sometimes look across from his last resting place in the little cemetery at Kilbride, and feast his eyes on that lovely landscape which, whether in the purple shades of evening or gilded by the earliest light of the morning sun, is not excelled in beauty by any of the lovely spots on the earth it has been my privilege to see, either along the historic Rhine, or in the old land from which he himself came, and which he so dearly loved.

Very few appreciated my old friends great mental powers. To most people he was only an old farmer, coming into town the last seventy years with his milk, but to me, who spent many hours in his company, in his home, where I lived, he was as welcome as one of his family. I learned to recognize in him a man of great powers of observation, a poet of Nature, a philosopher constantly seeking the cause of God's wonders spread out abundantly around him. The ripening fields, the crops he annually gathered, followed his plough, and he him than mere articles of commerce. They were proofs of a great living Engineer who has his hand ever on the wheel of the world. The humbling weed on his farm had its appropriate value and place, and if not so generally regarded, it is because we lack the understanding of its use. He was not easily cast down by the blighting effects of the cold North Easter, which kept the growth back, or the drought which led to the short crops, or the insect pests which wasted the crops of the young plants. None of these called forth a murmur; he took every thing as it came, and blessed the great Giver of all.

No more will these great drawbacks to the husbandman trouble him. He has gathered his last harvest, looked for the last time at the deepening shadows of the harvest moon. When the Spring returns, and ploughing and seeding is again with us he will no longer follow the plough, or sow the seed, but the dew on his grave will ripen the wild grass and flowers he loved so well, and which spoke so eloquently of his industry and love of God. The loving herds will return as of yore in the evening, his children will reap the crops that he sowed. All those things will turn his dreams, but for him there will be no more toil. I am sorry I could not have been by the couch of my old friend, to have grasped his hand for the last time, but I am sure his weary eyes must have feasted in his last vision, and been gladdened by seeing some of our happy Kilbride celebrations, and heard the cheers of the close of the morning from his chair, took off his coat, and girded himself for the fray. I again thank you for your thoughtfulness in remembering me in this way, and will be grateful if you will see that the enclosed letter is handed to the members of Mr. McDonald's family.

Your truly,
(Signed) MORRIS.
