"It is a secret I have kept even from my husband, but if you must have it you must." And rising on tiptoe with a look of merry defiance at the doctor, she whispered something in the visitor's ear. He listened, stared at her a moment, and broke into a genial laugh.

"And so this is your secret," he cried. "Well, I know how to respect the secrets of a lady when such respect does not interfere with my duty." And with a gallant bow he took his my doubts. I will talk with you again, The play may not be worth the andle, and it may; a few days more will determine."

And Molesworth?" 'Is very well as he is." conversation, fragmentary though it is, will show something of the stand which Mr. Gryce was taking in the matter. He had Molesworth unrest, and yet he was not satisfied. Something-was it instinct or experience-told that this affair possessed complications of no ordinary character, and that to a conscientious man like himself there were doubts to be solved and possibilities to be sounded before he could dare proceed against the doctor as against a presumably guilty

The direction which these doubts took was certainly a startling one. He owed this much to himself, and ques-tioned more than once his own safety in thus connecting, however remotely a woman of Genevieve's character and sition with the tragic death of a poor working girl. But the suspicion once entertained, would not vanish at his bidding; and when he found that the great lady stooped to lie about so small a matter as the person who made her gowns (for he gave no credit to whispered assertion she had made in his superior's ear), he was confident that he was more sane than he had sometimes feared, and that the clew he had stumbled upon was worth following, even if there was as yet but little sign of light chead. He was influenced, perhaps, in these conclusions by certain recollections which now recurred to him. In his interview with Celia previous to the return of Miss Gretorex to her home, there had been much talk, trivial talk he had thought then, about a girl who had brought home her young mistress'

"A proud, disdainful person," this Celia had declared in her broken English, "who thought herself too good to show her face to common people, for none of us ever saw her without a veil, and she never spoke. But we tried to make her when we met her in the hall or on the stairs. She carried a big box, and when I saw it or her I got so angry I could only just keep my tongue quiet and no more. But Miss Gretorex had told me to let her in whenever she came, and not to make trouble with her. So I was afraid to treat her as she deserved. But if I knew then that I was to go without notice after all-And so on till even the patient detective had grown weary over what had appeared to be such a foolish waste of

But with the kindred remembrance of what the woman in Mrs. Olney's boarding house had said about Mildred Farley's frequent comings and goings her great box, he did not consider it so foolish now, and only wished he had probed the subject deeper at the time. It was not so late yet, however, but that proper inquiries into the right places would settle the question as to whether these two girls were the same. He had only to pass a word or two with the complaisant butler at Mr. Gretorex's house to learn enough to have the laugh, to say the least, on his somewhat credulous superior. To Mr. Gretorex's house he therefore went. and to Mr. Gretorex's butler he at once addressed himself. He found this person quite ready to talk in his easy, French way.

"Zat girl? I—none of ze help know somezing 'bout zat giri, only Mees Gretorex always was home when she come A veil on ze face? Oui, so zick you no can see if she was black or white.

But she was ver pretty-look good, 'A Sacre! She walk good—proud like a comtesse. She no look at me. One time Pierre try, I try to speak wiz her. It was no good. If she was much deaf she do just so; for she look not to me, she look not to Pierre."

"You're right, count," laughed a voice over their shoulders, "and one of us ain't a bad looking man, aither." It was Peter, who liked a bit of gossip as well as his neighbor, and who now came forward smiling.
"I feel ze compliment, M. Pierre, and it is ver much good for you to say so," retorted the "Count," with a grandiose "It is ze opinion of ze ladies of

The butler then winked slyly at Mr. Gryce, and satisfied that he had effectually discomfited the rootman, proceeded to put questions to the detective as to his reasons for the interest he had shown in this girl, which that functionary had wit and experience enough to successfully parry.

Peter helped him; for Peter was a rival of the butler's in more than one field, and in his good-natured way invariably took part against him in any controversy, and it was from Peter that Mr. Gryce finally got the acknowledgment that this young woman, or lady, as he persisted in calling her, usually wore a long, black ulster and made her appearance in the evening.

Now, this was satisfactory. In the closet of Mildred Farley at Mrs. Olney's house there was a long, black ulster, and she, as we know, was accustomed to take her work home even-

"But she didn't have the alster on the last time she called, on, no," continued Peter. "I don't know what it was made the difference, but she looked foine. O now! well I'm tellin' ye I wouldn't have known her at all, at all, but for her ould brown veil and little hand bag. Them wur the same as before, and so was the air of her. Not a word nor the devil of a look for one of us; but being the night of the wedding she got cut o' me head, for sure I had enough else to moind."

The last admission was a surprise, but Mr. Gryce was accustomed to surprises, so he kept quite still; the more so that he saw the butler was about to speak, and he always preferred to glean his facts through the questions of other people rather than his own. "Zat girl here on Miss Gretorex's wedding night? I zink you was mistake. Pierre. "Mistaken is it I am! when these two hands let her in meseif at the back door. It wasn't only here she was, but it's helpin' Miss Gretorex to dress she it's helpin' Miss Gretorex to dress she was, and devil a minute she had to spare, aither, being just in the nick of time to be any help at all, at all, to her. I didn't see her leave, though."

Mr. Gryce felt his interest cool. Reason told him how improbable it was that this person, with all her mysteries, could have been the grayway bride of colud have been the runaway bride of Julius Molesworth. Even if this house had not been miles distant form the C- hotel where he himself had seen her at 7 o'clock of that same night, the great improbability of her flying from her own nuptials to assist in this very humble capacity at those of another was too manifest for his consideration even. Yet because habit was strong in him, and habit forbade him to leave a subject till he had exhausted it, he putin a word which he thought must settle the matter. "You are an observing man," he remarked to Peter, "and seem to have noticed this girl closely. Was this bag she carried a small, yellow one?" "It was not, thin," that person emhatically shook his head. "It was small, that it was, but not a mark of yellow about it at all. I see it many's the time. It's "And would you know it if you saw it again?"

"I'll not say that, sur; but I could tell if it wur the same kind of one." Mr. Gryce smiled and produced from his capacious pocket the bag which had been found by him in the doctor's phaeton.

"Was it like this one?" he asked, holding it up between the two men, with the initials towards Peter, and the blank side towards the butler.

RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE

By Ahoghill L. O. L -Sympathy With Brother Brett

At the regular June meeting of Ahoghill L. O. L., No. 230, the following letter of condolence was ordered to be engrossed and forwarded to Bro. Geo.

Moved by Bro. S. Clare, and seconded by Bro. J. Walker, that whereas this L. O. L. No. 230 has learned with profound regret of the sad loss sustained by Bro. Geo. Brett, chaplain of our lodge, in the death of his beloved daughters, and whereas we recognize in the affliction of our brother the over-ruling hand of divine Providence, to whose unvarying wisdom all must bow; be it therefore resolved that we the members of Ahoghill L. O. L. No. 230 wish to convey to you the deep and heartfelt sympathy of the brethren in this your trying ordeal of sorrow and sadness. It would be impossible to express to you in words the profound sorrow that brooded over the brethren of this lodge when they learned of the death of your beloved daughters. Although we may but faintly estimate the severity of your loss, we wish to try to convey in some measure to you our tender sympathy in the dark hour of trial. We recognize the fact that when we are called upon to part from those we love tenderly, it is hard to say "Thy will be done," but we feel sure, dear brother, that if you carry your sorrow to him who was the Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief, you will be given strength to say "He that doeth all things well knoweth best." Just now the clouds of sad bereavement may seem very dark, but there is a silver lining to every cloud. We sincerely hope and trust the Almighty will give you strength to bear with resignation the burden of sorrow in which we most deeply sympathize with you. Signed on behalf of the lodge, J. MACDONALD, Worshipful Master; CHAS. N. PERRIN, Recording Secretary; J. WALKER, Treasurer; S. CLARE, Past Master. The following is a reply to the above letter by Bro. Brett at the regular meeting, July 10: "I desire to express to you my heartfelt gratitude and warmest thanks for the beautiful and comforting letter of condolence which you extended so kindly to me in my recent great bereavement. Death has during the short space of two months visited my earthly home twice and snatched from my loving care two of my beloved children, but I thank God that I know they are only transplanted from this world of parting and sorrow to that heavenly home where there is no more parting or sorrow or death, and where Christ himself doth reign. Again thanking you for your much sympathy, believe me to be, yours fraternally, GEORGE BRETT."

WINNIPEG'S MASONIC TEMPLE. Winnipeg, Man., July 17.—Monday morning a large gathering of prominent members of the Masonic order assembled on the site of the new temple, corner of Ellice and Donald streets, to witness the turning of the first sod in due and ancient form. Jerrald, while on her way from Charlotte for this port, ran aground half a mile west of the Main light. There was a dense fog, and the captain says the variation of the compass helped to cause the accident. The vessel is on a flat rock, and not much damaged. A tug from Kingston is on the way to her assistance. Some of the passengers were landed in small boats and conveyed to Brighton Station, where they took trains to their destinations.

A TREACHEROUS COMMANDER. San Francisco, July 17.-The ease with which the Japanese captured Port Arthur during the recent war with China is explained to some extent by an ar-ticle in the Japan Gazette, which ar-rived on the last steamer. According to the Gazette, one of the commanders of the Chinese forts was a native of Japan, and who had acquired favor in Chinese councils through a along residence in the Flowery Kingdom, and intentionally caused the shots from the guns to be misdirected so they would fall short of the Japanese war ships, having betrayed his adopted land for the land of his birth. This commander is said to have appeared before the victorious Japanese generals, acknowledged his treason to the Chinese, and then committed suicide in their pres-

Acting on this advice, I rrocured the medicine, and less than a half-bottle cured me; I certainly believe it saved my life. HOLE IN THE FENCE

How a Bay City, Mich, Man Kissed a Woman.

Bay City, Mich., July 16 .- An amusing assault and battery case was tried before Police Justice Kelley yesterday afternoon. A. H. Ingraham, a resident of the south side, was arrested on complaint of Daniel Trombley, a boy of 13 years. The boy claims that Ingraham slapped and kicked him because he made remarks while the defendant was in the act of kissing a woman through a hole in the fence on the defendant's premises, and that he, in company with another boy, watched him talk with the lady about five minutes prior to the kissing episode. Mr. Ingraham claims he was not connected with any kissing affair, and was talking through this hole in the fence to a boy to whom he promised to give some fireworks left from the Fourth. During this conversation the Trombley boy threw stones at him. He took the boy by the arms and gave him a lecture, but resorted to no rough usage. However, he was found guilty, and was fined $4 and $2 50 costs.

The affidavit asserts further that Gould has in his ssession certain letters material to the pending action against him, which the court is asked to have him produce upon the trial.
