

A pullet that lays is your money-maker. Watch her, note her, mark her with a leg-band, and do not lose track of her. If she lays early and regularly, she will look it. She will be bright, first as to her head; she will have a fairly long body and will have a quick business air about her. She will be active and important; she will be hungry and will meet you when you come with the feed pail. Glance around at the rest of the pen—you will see dumpish, stupid-looking pullets, pale in comb and ruffled in plumage; these are not laying, and the contrast will surprise you. Take out the dumpish ones and pen them separately and leave the bright ones alone to continue laying. The dumpish pullets are out of condition and need special care. They may be brought around and will lay later perhaps, but do not let them hamper your early layers.—Michigan Fancier.
