

College Note-Book.

STUDENT LIFE.

A desperate attempt to curb the liberties of the press, which took the form first of threats and then of enticing bribes, has, we are glad to say, proved utterly futile. The Local Editor has escaped with scalp unscathed and honor unsullied, and is now able to undertake the completion of the task commenced last month.

McCuaig, W. Wilberforce.—A sunny nature, with a strong sense of the ridiculous. Mimic, reciter, ventriloquist, storyteller—he enlivened many a dull evening for his fellow-students during his college career. Was subjected to an attack of matrimony when in first year Theology, and has been at the Home Hospital ever since.

“ Full well they laughed . . .
At all his jokes, for many a joke had he.”

McGregor, A.—A tall, fair gentleman, with a handsome moustache. Is acquiring a slight shoulder stoop, not exactly the scholarly stoop, but rather a social stoop, due to fraternizing with people of small stature. Alec. is a McGill graduate, and a very good all-round man.

McGerrigle, J. A.—It is not often Third Year Theology men are characterized by excessive self-effacement, but once in a long while you will come across one who is modest to a fault, and of such is the present Corresponding Editor of the Journal. McGerrigle has artistic qualities of a rare order, judging from recent efforts in the Morrice Hall. He is another of the eight B.A. men in the class.

McIntosh, Major H.—“ A lad o’ pairts.” Gold Medalist and Valedictorian in Arts, Valedictorian Elect in Theology and Editor-in-Chief of the Journal. He “bears his blushing
