BRUSH & CO., TORONTO

The solution of the industrial problem will not be reached by the teaching of class hatred nor by the enactment of arbitrary laws, but by the universal recognition of the principle of justice and fair play between employer and employee; and in addition to this, the opening of new avenues of opportunity whereby the co-operation of the cities may return to the country and secure homes up to the land. The principles of unselfishness and brotherly love must be inculcated by the proper teaching and it is of our youth, so that when men mature and ripe age boundaries, they will not be the all-absorbing of their life.—Maxwell's Telleman.
