

Traffic Manager Olds of the Canadian Pacific, in an interview at Montreal recently on the movement of grain from the Northwest said, "I expect in a few days to have sent to me the exact number of cars of grain moved from the Northwest last season, but am pretty sure from information I now have that up to the present time fully seven eighths of the export crop has been moved; that we have moved over thirteen million bushels; and that the Northern Pacific have carried at least two million bushels. These figures mean, of course, breadstuffs not altogether wheat. Besides this at least five or six per cent of poor grain has been held by the producers for feeding purposes. I should say that after the remaining eighth has moved the total figures will not show less than sixteen million bushels for export."
