A New Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the membrane of the nose and catarrhal tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness and Hay Fever are cured in from one to three simple applications made at home. A pamphlet, explaining this new treatment, is sent free on receipt of stamp, by

SIMCOE COUNTY.

We are still having a lively time in Cardwell. Inspector Clark keeps busy now hunting. Several of the whiskey sellers of the evade-the-law-if-I-can type, have been caught, convicted and paid their fines; the costs in some cases amounting to almost as much as the fine. Prominent among these were Small and Cooney. It was at the tavern kept by this Small that constable McMillan was so shamefully beaten a short time ago, when on duty. In company with Cooney, who had evaded the law for three or six weeks, he went to Toronto, but tidings of their whereabouts reached here and constables were sent for them and they were brought back handcuffed and fined $30 each, the costs in both cases being nearly $60. A few such cases soon convince the most persistent and stubborn of these law-breakers that it is useless to fight against fate, and though we hear a great deal of boasting about the amount of liquor sold, facts go to prove that the Temperance Act is doing work and every man woman and child who claims to be a friend of the Temperance cause should stand by it till we get something better. The village of Tottenham and vicinity gives the officers of the law more trouble than any other place of equal area in the district. We do not know what cause to give for this unless it be that an element of the community, which ought to know better, is friendly to the liquor traffic. We do not like making such statements nor drawing such conclusions, but we like to state facts. It might be of interest to some of your readers to hear a short history of some of these places of illegal traffic and their occupants. At one place intoxicants were being by one McGrath, but a charge being laid against him he cleared out, and has not yet been heard from. Patrick Nolan took his place and was determined that he would sell in defiance to the law, for he had his den well provided with various weapons of warfare, as clubs, revolvers, muskets, sabres, &c., &c. He was courageous for a while and flung open his doors, and no doubt did a pretty good trade. But soon the novelty wore away, and courage, too, for one day, a short time after, a squad of constables appeared on the scene, and Paddy was not at home that day, for he was out of the village about a mile, hidden under a big tree. This scare appears to have had a bad effect on him, for he left shortly afterwards and went to Alliston, a village 14 miles north. But even here the wicked constable came with an invitation for Paddy, whom they met in Donnelly's Hotel, and he would have gone with them only the mob interfered and Paddy thought he would stay with the mob, seeing they were so good as to take him from the constables. But a few days after this, poor Paddy accidentally met one of the same constables on the road as he was walking towards Tottenham. The officer of the law ordered a halt, but as the mob were not there to hold Paddy he took to the woods, hotly pursued by the constable, who, finding his kind and urgent entreaties unheeded, levelled his revolver and sent a leaden messenger in hot pursuit. But it does not seem to have caught him in the right spot, for though he yelled and leaped into the air about three feet, yet he was too scared to wait, but kept right on and may be going yet for all we know. It is amusing to hear the desperate lies to which some newspapers favorable to these law breakers will give utterance, but it is more amusing to see these would-be brave men run when even a strange man is seen about and whom their guilty imagination transforms into a constable.
