SUGGESTIONS FOR IMPROVING UN PERFORMANCE

A Speech by the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada, the Honourable Don Jamieson, to the Thirty-Second Regular Session of the United Nations General Assembly, New York, September 26, 1977.

This year we welcome two new members to the Assembly, the Republic of Djibouti and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam. As a member of the Security Council, Canada was pleased to recommend both countries for membership, and we look forward to working with them in this organization.

Effectiveness in the UN

Like others who will participate in this debate, I have received much advice on what I should say that might be helpful in solving the many problems we face. It has been a frustrating experience.

I have concluded that I could read my last year's speech again, word for word, and no one would notice the repetition, nor would they care! The sad truth is that every serious issue I and many others raised last year remains unresolved, and some now pose a greater threat to peace and security than they did 12 months ago. It has not been a good year for the United Nations.

Small wonder that our deliberations have so little relevance for our publics back home or for the many millions round the world whom we are committed to help but who have become disillusioned and cynical about our ability to find answers to what are, in many cases, matters of life and death.

I make these judgments with regret. No country has been more consistent than Canada in supporting the principles of the United Nations. We do not have to apologize for our record here or for the attitude of the Canadian people in accepting responsibilities for peacekeeping, for leadership in the "North-South dialogue" and for making a fair contribution to all UN initiatives. Canada and Canadians have earned the right to be heard, and what Canadians are saying is that the performance of the United Nations is not good enough.

Canada does not, of course, exclude itself from all blame for this inadequate record. Like other countries, there are times when we get our priorities mixed and lack the proper sense of urgency in dealing with new or continuing threats to world order and security. Nor am I interested merely in pointing the finger at others for the dubious pleasure of giving vent to my frustrations. I speak as I do because I know that many of you share my views. It is not our sense of commitment that is flagging; no one in his right mind would wilfully project the world towards more bloodshed and potential global conflict. All of us want peace and order in international affairs.
