In planning for labour market needs, has the government made predictions as to employment in Metro Toronto and, if so, according to these predictions (a) what will the absolute number of manufacturing jobs be there in (i) 1994 (ii) 1999 (b) what percentage will that be of the current level (c) which ten manufacturing sub-sectors will experience the greatest net job loss over the above time-frames (d) what size will that loss be (e) what is the predicted employment level in the clothing industry for the above time-frames (f) what job categories, overall, are expected to have the greatest absolute increase through 1994 and 1999 (g) in each case, what is their average expected pay level?

Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Employment and Immigration Canada has not produced any official projections relating to the industrial and occupational configuration of the Metro Toronto labour market to the year 1999. The technical difficulties, the most serious being the lack of reliable data, involved in such an exercise are many. Until these constraints can be overcome, small area projections, rather than providing a useful planning tool, may in fact give an unrealistic picture of the future Metro labour market.

Question No. 170—Mr. Murphy:

Is it the policy of the government to investigate alleged infractions of the Parliament of Canada Act by (a) Members of the House of Commons (b) Senators?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): The policy of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) is to investigate offences against any Federal Statute where a complaint has been received and there is sufficient grounds to believe that an offence may have been committed.

Should the RCMP receive a complaint relative to an infraction of the Parliament of Canada Act and the complainant provides sufficient evidence that an offence may have been committed then the matter would be duly investigated.
