

did, in propria persona, purchase an entire sheep, for seven dollars, being one of the fine prize sheep exhibited on the 7th ult. together with a noble calfs head, with the intention of inviting his brother-directors of the Montreal Library to partake of an entertainment in which he meant to exhibit how excellently a sheep's carcass and a calf's head can be made to assimilate.

Law-report. The important trial of Count Old-Joseph, Mr. Jarret, Mr. McSlaughterem, and Mrs. McRope, for a conspiracy against the Scribbler, upon the indictment recently published, has taken place. Mrs. McRope, having clearly proved an alibi, was acquitted; the others were found guilty, but recommended to mercy by the jury, the two first on account of imbecility of intellect, and Mr. McSlaughterem because it was proved that in this, as in many preceding instances, he was no other than a cat's paw, and a scapegoat, for others behind the curtain.

NOTICE. The gentleman whose brains are said to be rather desiccated, and who has frequently been seen sneaking about the military messhouse, after having been told not to shew his face there, is advised not to repeat this trespass upon urbanity.

MR. EDITOR,

I have often been surprised to observe that you do not favour your very numerous readers with an occasional notification of marriages reported as likely to take place among the fashionables of this gayest of cities; such notices are frequently seen in the London papers, and why not follow so good an example? Perhaps this omission may arise from a want of correct information, permit me therefore to send you the following, which you may rely upon as authentic.
