British Columbia Salmon Pack.

The following complete returns of the salmon pack on the Fraser River up to August 24, and the pack canned and salted from the northern waters, has been furnished the Westminster

Columbian by Thomas Mowat, inspector of fisheries. The northern pack is complete for the season, and shows a decrease of about 10,000 cases from last year. The Fraser river pack last year was 76,000 cases, so that the increase for 1889 is something enormous. As the coho salmon run still remains to be packed it is hard to estimate what the grand total for the season will be, but if the run is anything like what is expected, at least 50,000 cases will be added to the present figures. The salmon run on the Fraser river this season has been phenomenal, and the like of it has never been seen in the memory of the oldest fisherman. The pack as given below would have been considerable larger but for the fact that all the canneries ran out of material and were forced to shut down simply on that account.

It is estimated that if the coho run is good the total pack for the Fraser river will reach at least 330,000 cases, which will make the grand total pack for the province in the neighborhood of 440,000 cases. Placing the value of each case at $6, a fair estimate, the value of the pack, exclusive of salted fish and fresh salmon shipped, will be $2,640,000. Following is the annual pack for the last 10 years:—
