"I wouldn't go up and ask one of the children who attend these instituthose clerks to pick out a hat for my wife at this time," declared one of the largest millinery, proprietors when questioned regarding the latest fashions in hats. "So I am afraid that will have to stand a few days."

The children who attend these institutions come from good homes and by keeping them continually in this environment they learn to appreciate all that is beautiful, and it will be an important factor in the moulding of their characters.

"Those milliners are rushed to death at present," he continued, "and we have to watch them like a cat watches and that great turning the past years, and that great turning the past years, have to watch them like a cat watches a mouse or they go stale. Stunning Costumes These.

Theatregoers of the gentler sex are to have a real treat at the Grand Opera. House this week, when Ward and Vokes' production of "The Promotors" displays the costume creations, which have been favorably commented upon Lucy Daly (Mrs. "Hap" Ward) has six costumes which defy description and must be seen to be appreciated. Mrs. Ward wears a typical gypsy dress that is far more exquisite and costly than would appear at first glance, and has to be examined critically for one to appreciate the hand-painting done with dyes that will not fade out, and to get the proper blends in shades. One of the most stunning gowns is a white duchess satin made entrain, worn by Miss M. Merrill, and is of the quality known as hand-full satin, which cost over $400. The hand embroidery s e'aborate, consisting of embossed roses and leaves in profusion, with a generous supply of seed pearls and great quantities of rhinestones. The waist or bodice is a decollete surprice pattern with chiffon "V," pearl trimmings and real point lace, with a low "V" back. Miss Merrill's superb figure sets off the gown like a queen, and the gown is equally becoming to her physical charm. Two other gowns worn chester-street, will receive to-day and Monday, the 8th, for the last time this season. Mrs. Alexander Coulter, 69 Gros-
