MARCH.

The bare hedges quake
And shiver in the ice-breeze, yet withal
Life lurks within the hedgerows: winter's grasp
Is ever sharpest ere he yield to Spring—
Even as the darkest night of the dark night
Is nearest to the crimson burst of day.

Pierceth the little snowdrop through the shroud
Around her, with a tender forethought thrown
By the white snow her sponsor: floweret first
To brave the not yet softened winter winds;
As oft some atom of a blue-eyed child
Dares with a pretty sauciness the will
Of one whose hand could crush him; confident
In his own winning acts, and reading well,
That to all men of true nobility
Weak things are strong, since weakness is their strength!
