SHE SUFFERED FIVE YEARS

Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Erie, Pa.—"I suffered for five years from female troubles and at last was almost helpless. I went to three doctors and they did me no good, so my sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and when I had taken only two bottles I could see a big change, so I took six bottles and I am now strong and well again. I don't know how to express my thanks for the good it has done me and I hope all suffering women will give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It was worth its weight in gold."
—Mrs. J. P. ENDLICH, R. F. D. No. 7, Erie, Pa.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E.
Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.
If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

short note, for Ruth had to take care that her writing would not betray her.
At last she succeeded in satisfying herself, and with some little difficulty, for her hands were shaking she tied her bonnet strings, and went out to post the letters.

She chose to go to the General Post Office, and after posting both notes came slowly homeward. Someone walking quickly brushed against her in coming up the North Bridge, and then turned and begged her pardon.
"I am sorry. I hope I have not hurt you," said Aleck Sutherland's full, rich voice, that had such a good ring in it.

She shook her head, and pulled her veil closer over her face. He bowed and went on.

CHAPTER XVI.

HETTY WATSON AS NURSE.

The meeting with Aleck Sutherland rather upset Ruth, and as she went slowly homeward she wondered how it was that he had not recognized her.
She had started so at the sound of his voice. It brought back old longings and old memories. And as he went on and vanished among the crowd, she half smiled as she saw the broad shoulders and the swing of his step. Aleck Sutherland always appeared to feel the mountain air about him, and to be tramping the heather with his dogs and his gun.

Ruth went up the High Street slowly, and as she went she looked keenly at every face. She was now her own master. She had been told that her boy was most likely stolen, but would surely be found in time. Oh, the weary waiting time! The hope deferred that made the heart sick! These were so many children; why should her one pet lamb be taken from her?
She felt again that God was unjust, and wondered how people could say He knew what was best for everybody.
How could that be? It was not good for her to be disgraced, nor was it good for her to lose her child. These thoughts made her feel hard and bitter. The first barred her return to her husband and her own home, the second made her unfit to earn her daily bread, and turned her life into a weariness. Ay, she felt as if, like Job, she could curse the day she was born. To look forward was so dreary and life without her boy so utterly hateful to her. Sometimes she wondered why she was so resigned and quiet under her troubles; how it was that she did not ask a "leap in the dark," a "plunge into the unknown," and end it all. One thing held her back—her boy might be found.

Ruth wondered, too, if she were being punished for her pride and will-fulness in the past, and if the boy was sharing her punishment. It did seem strange that he should disappear just as she herself had once done.
Might it be if she were to go back and say "I have sinned," her child would be restored? Once, long ago, she had declared her disbelief in prayer. "Why," as she had argued "need I pray, when there is a Ruler who is ordering my life? I need not debate to Divine Wisdom." But Ruth understood better now; she felt that she must believe that prayer could be heard, or she would grow mad. The "stern, unyielding doctrine," as she had heard it called, somehow soothed her. "Prayer is an offering up of our desires unto God for things agreeable to His will." Her desire, ah, surely it was a thing "agreeable to God's will"—that God who was "able and ready to help us."

With thoughts such as these she went slowly up to the Infirmary, remembering that she had promised to call and see the two patients on her way home. She had now become a familiar figure to the nurses in the hospital, some of them fancying she belonged to a sisterhood.

In the wards Ruth always passed before any children she might see.
She had always a kind word for them.
This evening she saw a little boy near the door of the students' room where Wilkie Campbell lay. It was a gentle face, not of about three, and was pull-

"What's flour gluten, Bud?"
"It's what makes your dough rise, Rose."

"Yes"—she encouraged.
Added Bud very sagely:
"Makes it rise in the mixer and expand in the oven. It's the elastic part of flour—absorbs all the water and milk—and things."

Rose grew interested.
"FIVE ROSES, said Bud, is exceedingly rich in gluten. I s'pose because it's all made from Manitoba wheat. Takes up a lot more water—makes those fat loaves—lasts longer too."

"Saves money, doesn't it?" asked Rose.
Bud in a big voice:
"The fat loaf makes the fat pocketbook!"
Use FIVE ROSES always.
And Rose said YES.

The .... Haughty Wife

And
Her
Troubles

She sat and read and re-read that note. Long ago she seventy-five pounds would have seemed a small sum just about enough to buy a smart gown. Now, it was a great sum of money to her—an un-get-at-able sum—yet it was cheering to know that her manuscript was favorably read, and likely to become a successful book. She sat and fancied it "attractively bound with illustrations," and boy reading it. It was a nice dream. If she had had the money she would have closed with the offer at once. As it was, she could only sigh, turn to her desk, and write the following:

"Gentlemen: I have received your note. I am sorry that I have not the money required to publish my book, nor can I obtain it. Can you not buy the copyright? I should be glad to part with it for a small sum."

"Yours truly,"
"Ruth Farmer,"
Then, after considering for a while, she wrote in small, sharp, calligraphic, to Roy Patterson:

"Sir: As the Exhibition closes today I will send on the picture you have bought from me, viz., 'The Haughty Wife.' Could you kindly send half of the money now, and the other half on receiving the picture?"

"Yours faithfully,"
"Ruth Farmer."

It took a long time to write that
