Accident.

(From the Metropolitan Magazine.)
A TRIP TO KILMARNOCK.
(Concluded.)

O'Kelly, by some occult means, limped his way into St. Patrick's Hall, on the first grand levee held by George IV. Surrounded by the good and bad blood of the land, the merry monarch moved about, dispensing "sweated smiles," as he well knew, when his eye fell suddenly on O'Kelly. He drew back with astonishment and well might. There stood the poet!

His figure such as might his soul proclaim,
And that, too, fastened by a leather strap to an oak-stump. In one hand he clenched a laced stick, mounted with the arc of a ram's horn; for, as he said, he loved everything pastoral, and with the other he dived occasionally into his waistcoat pocket for the brother horse, to take snuff, for the glitter made him sneeze. He wore a brown rat-tail coat—a waistcoat, originally black, but then steeped in all the hues of the rainbow, not unlike a painter's apron; his trousers and a half of the like material and colour, and to crown the poetic picture, his hat stalk was encircled by a bow-wig, made of split bristles. Behind him now, on foot, his dirty beaver in one hand, the cane in the other, while his body fell back quite at ease on the oak-stump. The king questioned Benjamin Bloomfield, and the answer made him smile. He was introduced by the master of the ceremony.

"Your majesty—Mr. O'Kelly."
The king made a bow, and said, "You are a very stiff old man. The following conversation took place—
"O'Kelly, I have heard of you ever now."
"Thank your majesty, as I thought. True poets are for all countries, and though I don't say it, my 'Casey' and 'Endogol' will live for ever."
"There are two lines in the 'Casey' that I do not like to produce their equal, though I don't say it. Did your majesty notice that sublime line—
"To ride for art—no elegant chance?"
"I regret to say I never read the poem to which you allude, but I have seen it in the 'Metropolitan'."
"Five thousand lines, your majesty, as fine as silk, and as sweet as honey. Will my art with Horace," "Exegi monumentum."
The poet's majesty of himself did not terminate as alluded to O'Kelly's laudations. Here the poet's pride was awakened.

"Yes, your majesty, the three of us were lame—it is the accident of genius."
"What three?" asked the king.
"Why, to be sure, Scott, Byron, and O'Kelly!"
The poet's majesty of himself did not terminate as alluded to O'Kelly's laudations. Here the poet's pride was awakened.

authority, says that the chimera of the Shandon bells on a tall evening...
"The bells of Shandon,
That peal so grandly o'er
The pleasant waters of the river Lee."
A glorious morning, and we started from the Imperial, after thinking Mr. Donnell, not more for the excellence of his fare than the moderation of his charges. The latter element, by-the-by, is a wonderful ingredient in reconciling the traveller to the maigre d'hotel, light cheese—good horse—pleasant driver—road in fine order. We went on at a slow but agreeable pace, leaving time to glance at the country, which from Cork to Macroom is a rich landscape, fertile in its soil, and abounding in the ruins of numerous towers. Every eminence almost is crowned with the ivied relics of ancient architecture, but we did not see a single round tower. Macroom is a poor inland town, governed by a very ineffectual politician and sportsman, a Mr. Hedges Lyne, whose castle and ample demesne are at least an ornament to the village. From Macroom the road is uninteresting, till you arrive at Ballyvourney, where the magnificent pass of Glenleak commences. This village enjoys a twofold celebrity in its position, viz. the valley of the inhabitants, who deserve a nobler chronicle than we are able to give. Their only trials in history are the pages of the "Metropolitan." No native has stepped forth to do justice to the heroes of Ballyvourney, the pen of a stranger will render that tribute to the pages of the "Metropolitan." If the magnanimity of the Ballyvourney men be at all questionable, none will doubt their discretion.

man of great talent, and eloquence, and influence, in the senate, and of unblemished integrity in private life—granting that, we say, for the sake of argument, and for the sake of argument only, for God forbid that we should be guilty of telling an untruth so innocently extravagant, so outrageously ridiculous, as to assert that Palmerston possessed either eloquence or talent, either influence or integrity—still he will ever remain, as he has ever been, an object of distrust, and ridicule, and contempt; because he has sold himself over and over again to every political party in the country—he has been overthrown by turns and nothing long, and then, for the most part, the most dishonourable, and the most infamous of motives. These two instances fully establish that the conscientious man, whatever his opinions, is beloved, and the time-server is despised.

ally, he has rendered much assistance, though not perhaps so much as he himself could have wished. As a speaker he is ready and fluent. He is always listened to with attention. He does not trouble himself with the flourishes of rhetoric, but he delivers good plain and practical speaking. He states his views clearly and distinctly, and often with great force and effect. He speaks very frequently, but seldom at any length. From the reason which our readers will recollect he gave when at Oxford last year, viz. "the reception of a bullet in his breast on the plains of Waterloo." In person he is tall, and rather slender built. He looks younger than he really is. He is no dandy, and his appearance is that of a perfect gentleman.

ESSENCE OF SMOKE.

For the Smoking of Hama, Bacon, Fish, &c.

THE subscriber begs respectfully to announce to the Public, that the Essence of Smoke has been extensively used throughout the Province during the past season, and that all those who have given it a fair trial, recommend it as decidedly preferable to the old mode of smoking fish and meat. It is a most perfect and delicate preparation, and smokes any quantity of meat or fish, without the least inconvenience or loss of time, by attending to the following plain directions. While the ham, &c. is moist from the pickle, wipe it with a dry towel, then wash it over three or four times with the Essence of Smoke, allowing six hours to elapse between each washing; hang it up, to dry, in a airy place, and it will keep for years, and in any climate. No fly or insect will touch any thing preserved with the Essence of Smoke.

Half a pint is sufficient for the largest ham. Meat or fish that has become tainted will be restored to a wholesome state in a few hours by being washed once or twice with the Essence of Smoke. For its use in the cure of Rheumatism, Inflammations, Cuts, Burns, Sprains, and many other complaints, and also for its beneficial effects in the removal of diseases, and accidents to which horses and cattle are liable, as Inflammation of the eyes, &c. &c. leaves, &c. see handbills.

A liberal commission allowed to merchants and traders wishing to become agents.

WHERE AND WHAT IS HEAVEN?
BY THE REV. J. M. M'CALL.
What is heaven, and where?
Repels the untimely native of the West.
The far beyond the purple mountain range,
The wide world's end, where angels are at rest,
The blissful land, where peace and love are found,
The happy home, where all our sorrows end,
The land of promise, where the righteous dwell,
The land of glory, where the saints are sent,
The land of life, where all our sins are forgiven,
The land of rest, where all our labours cease,
The land of peace, where all our fears are gone,
The land of joy, where all our sorrows end,
The land of love, where all our hearts are true,
The land of hope, where all our fears are gone,
The land of faith, where all our doubts are done,
The land of grace, where all our sins are done,
The land of mercy, where all our hearts are true,
The land of kindness, where all our hearts are true,
The land of goodness, where all our hearts are true,
The land of beauty, where all our hearts are true,
The land of wisdom, where all our hearts are true,
The land of power, where all our hearts are true,
The land of glory, where all our hearts are true,
The land of life, where all our hearts are true,
