STANLEY ASQUITH, COUSIN OF PREMIER, A TORONTO SHOEMAKER

(Toronto News)

There is a boot and shoe hospital at 273 College street in which the head physician is third cousin to the Premier of England, Mr. Herbert H. Asquith, while he has for his assistant, the man who was the conductor on the first car that ran through the Piccadilly tube in London—opened a few years ago by Mr. David Lloyd-George, the new Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Stanley Asquith is the name of the man who presides over this institution where shoes are made whole again, and where the doctor is a third cousin to the Premier of England. He is twenty-four years of age, and was born in Canada. He is a slight, thin man, with a great deal of his nose skyward to the top of his head, and a fair hair, there is discernible the Asquith cast of countenance. He has a picture of the Premier pasted up in his shop, and he himself does not deny that there is a striking resemblance.

"My father used to tell me," said he to The News this morning, "that his grandfather and Mr. Herbert Asquith's grandfather were brothers. Let's see, that would make me third cousin to the present Premier, wouldn't it? The family lived in the same localities in Yorkshire, at any rate, and of course, if the Premier is going to insist upon it, we'll have to own up to the relationship, I suppose." This was Mr. Asquith's little joke.

Wilbur Mitchell returned home Wednesday from Lewiston (Me.).

LORD ROSEBERY AND SOCIALISM

(The Standard, London.)

The Earl of Rosebery delivered a remarkable speech March 12 to the members of the Liberal League in the Whitehall rooms of the House of Commons.

Lord Rosebery was received with cheers on rising. After expressing his pleasure at again being at a meeting of the league, he went on to say: I confess that in 1905 when the new government was formed, I had come to the conclusion that the league might well come to an end, having so amply fulfilled its purpose, and that conviction has remained with me up to the present time. But when I communicated it to the league, the more active members of the movement had come to a directly opposite conclusion. They pointed out the value of the league, the continued necessity for its principles being advanced at the present time; they pointed out that from our trunk were still springing fresh sprouts of socialism, and that it was necessary to have such an organization as the league, to keep the more active members of the movement in touch with the public mind, and to have such an organization as the league, to keep the more active members of the movement in touch with the public mind, and to have such an organization as the league, to keep the more active members of the movement in touch with the public mind.

Therefore, the banner of the Liberal party, I venture to say, was an absurdity in that context. If socialism were to dominate our community, the Liberal party must be aware that it would inevitably disappear. The advocates of progress would either enter upon a path of false ideas held out by the socialists, or they would recoil from all such progress altogether, and join the Conservative forces. The Conservative party would probably fare better because in all communities there must necessarily be a Conservative force. But what would the use of the Conservative party be when there was nothing left to conserve. And now I have hurried on to the last point on which I wish to lay stress today, because I am anxious to have the last feeling barrier which would stand in the way of the progress of the Liberal party removed. I mean the point of an effective second chamber.

This is a country in which all the barriers to popular caprice, popular impulse, popular whim, are by far the weakest. You had formerly a very strong second chamber, backed by the veto of the sovereign. The veto of the sovereign has long disappeared, and it is no longer a barrier to the effectiveness of the second chamber. Now, I contrast that with the United States, the most democratic country the world has ever known. You have a written constitution not one syllable or letter of which can be altered without great and lengthy constitutional processes. You have a senate of overpowering authority. You have the veto of the president, not a form that has fallen into disuse, but a form that is a considerable element in the constitution. Here we have nothing, absolutely nothing, but the feeble barrier of an hereditary second chamber, which it is now sought entirely to abolish.

Now, I must honestly say that, considering the menace that has been falling upon this country, and that it is prepared to rear on every occasion again, it does strike me as an amazing policy to do away with the barrier which I myself have just been saying is so feeble. I am not prepared to proceed by resolution in the years 1894 and 1898. But a great deal has passed since that time. In the last place, the last feeling barrier which would stand in the way of the progress of the Liberal party removed. I mean the point of an effective second chamber.

IMPERIAL RELATIONS.

I shall not dwell on our continued opposition to an independent parliament, or on the same imperialism which, perhaps, was the origin of our foundation. The necessity of that same imperialism continues to exist at the present time.

I am one of those who are anxious for friendly relations with not one, but all the great powers of Europe. That should be the principle of the foreign policy of Great Britain, and although I well know the difficulty, I should allow myself to be tempted to interfere with that fixed purpose in the foreign policy of Great Britain. But that does not do away with the necessity of a vast superiority at sea, and for constant readiness, constant vigilance with regard to the armaments on land. And that is necessary, because whenever you allow your armaments to sink below a certain level, you will be liable to periodical, and sometimes to permanent, unworthy of a great nation, and dangerous to the very heart of the empire.

The second reason is that it is necessary to hold that flag, and keep it pure and unadorned from that imperialism which has protection as its basis, and which sees in the protection of its own interests the only basis of its existence. I speak with great respect of our self-governing colonies. I do not criticise them, but I must say that, from the point of view of the empire, those tariffs are not an advantage, and that it is necessary to the union, and I for one will never consent to a new and more universal tariff of the empire, and that it is necessary to the union, and I for one will never consent to a new and more universal tariff of the empire, and that it is necessary to the union, and I for one will never consent to a new and more universal tariff of the empire.

RISKS OF REVOLUTION.

You say that there is no chance of this. I am not so sure. (A voice: No chance at all.) Well, I will come to that in a moment. No, I will come to it at once. I think there is a very considerable chance, if we abolish the house of lords, of the house of commons prevailing in the majority, and by the majority, I mean the majority of the commons, not the majority of the lords. I am afraid that that is only too probable. You say that socialism is a minority, and that it will always remain a minority.

But the lesson history written on every page is that revolutions are made not by the majority, but by the minority. I earnestly, if you like, minority, but still a minority.

Do you suppose the Puritans in the great revolution which ended in the overthrow of the throne and the life of Charles I. were the majority of the nation? No, they were a very considerable minority. They overthrew the throne and took the life of Charles I. were in a majority? No, they were a very considerable minority. They overthrew the throne and took the life of Charles I. were in a majority? No, they were a very considerable minority.

TRADE AND SOCIAL REFORM.

I pass from that to the cognate question of free trade. I have nothing further to say about that, but I must say that it is an enormous majority that is safely established for a long period to come, and it is not, therefore, one of those Irish home rule bills that I have been talking about. I don't know a great deal about our family tree, but I am sure that it is not a very long one. I don't know a great deal about our family tree, but I am sure that it is not a very long one. I don't know a great deal about our family tree, but I am sure that it is not a very long one.

The McCormick Binder

YOU, of course, want to buy a harvesting machine that will save your crop without delay and without expense for repairs. That's one reason why you should own a McCormick binder.

The McCormick is the machine that has stood the test of time. Many thousands of prosperous farmers believe there is no other binder in the world.

Its main frame and main and grain wheels are strong and substantial, thus insuring a solid foundation to carry all the shocks of the harvest. The wheels are made of the best material, and are so constructed that they will run on any kind of ground, and here is no unnecessary wear.

The platform can be easily raised or lowered to cut high or low stubble. The reel which is easily thrown in or out of gear, and the platform can be easily raised or lowered to cut high or low stubble.

That is the secret why Scotland clung to the Stuarts long after everyone else had given them up. But if I am told that the Scotchmen, when they were elected in 1905, were elected on the basis of the second chamber would cease to exist. And that is the procedure which the plan of the government would facilitate, and which the plan of the government makes absolutely certain of adoption, in the event of our having a ministry which wishes, as many members of the house of commons do, for a single chamber alone.

METHODIST CAMPGROUNDS

Getting Ready for Spring Reopening.

Work—Not Likely to Ask Government Aid for Wharf.

With the opening of spring the committee in charge of the new Methodist camp ground on the C.P.R. are getting ready to push operations. The outlook is reported bright, for a successful sale of lots. Already sixty have been laid out, and thirty have been disposed of.

The committee held a meeting last Thursday. Rev. James Crisp, Rev. Neil MacLaughlin and James Miles were appointed a sub-committee to go to the grounds this week and make arrangements for clearing the road from the station platform to the grounds, and the central road through the grounds to the river to where the new wharf will be built. It was the intention of the committee to ask the local government for aid in building this wharf, but they have now about decided to erect it at their own expense. The reason for this is that it is felt that if the government aids in the work, there might be some difficulty in making the wharf private.

Preparations are being made to run an extension to the new camp grounds on May 24.
