THE PAIRY TALE. A Protest From Lady Warwick Over

Its General Abolition. Lady Warwick is lifting her voice still another cause. The general abolition of the fairy tale lead her to send the following letter to The London Daily

Sir,-May I plead for the childre whom the Duchess of Somerset would rob of their fairy tales? I read in The Daily Mail a few days ago that the Duchess visited the village school of Maiden Bradley, and was shocked to find that the children were reading fairy tales of the type of "The Sleeping Beauty." The Duchess condemned the tales as nonsense, and said that the tales as nonsense, and said that the children ought instead to be reading about Julius Caesar and other gree

May I point out that fairy storie like "The Sleeping Beauty" are n nonsense, but contain lessons of gre-value for children? The moral sen in a child may best be reached by stin ulating the imagination, and this yo will never do by ramming down in throat facts about Julius Caesar. Yo throat facts about Julius Caesar. You must give rein to a child's imagination to develop its intellect, and this can in the first instance be better done by the fairy story than by dates and the dry bones of history.

It seems to me that in the fairy story is distilled the wisdom of countless generations in teaching the child the first great lessons of life. In There is many a child who will im after lift race its first awakening to the love of the unselfash and the pheroic from the fairy story. Every ove of us is a race its first awakening to the love of the unselfish and the heroic from the fairy story. Every one of us is a "Sleeping Beauty." It depends how long the sleep lasts, and how strong the brambles grow. But the awakening comes to all. To a few by a real "Prince Charming." to others by a rousing from the selfithness and ignorance hedging, every fe before knowledge comes.

ance hedging, every fife before knowledge comes.
What do so many of such stories teach if it is not the beauty of helping others in distress. Every child may be a knight errant- and it is this spirit of knight erranty that is taught by so many of these despised fairy stories.
What better moral could be drawn from any story than that of "Cinderella?" No child with any imagination could be unkind to its step-sister or brother after reading "Cinderella." Or take the story of "Jack the Glant Killer," "The Ugly Duckling," "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," "Puss in Boots," as wonderful Lamp," "Puss in Boots," as only a few whose moral is obvious, and it would be difficult to teach a child these lessons by reading to it the "Conquest of Gaul." What should we all do in after life without imagination.? Without it we should miss the mystery and the worder of life. I wonder how many of us owe this second sight, this "inward eye which is the bliss of solitude," to the first awakening of our imagination under the influence of the fairy tale? It seems to me that there would be many more people condemned to grope their way blindly through life, like weary prisoners shut in by prison walls, if their imaginations had not been stirred by the fairy stories of their childhood. This applies far more to the child who is brought up in surroundings of poverty, where there is nothing to feed everything to deed the nothing to feed, everything to dead

I am glad to see the London County Council is wise enough to understand the value of the fairy story in its infant schools, and I hope that the chil-dren of the Maiden Bradley School will not be obliged, after the Duchess' re-marks, to read Julius Caesar instead of he Sleeping Beauty."

Allan Ramsay, the poet, was till an obscure young man and a wig-naker he once fell behind with his ent, and, as ill luck would have it, he came plump upon the laird on the The dreadful subject of "the ent' came immediately on the carpet, nd Ramsay, with shame and grief, confessed his inability to satisfy his

To his great relief, however, the laird expressed perfect indifference about the matter, for, having observed Ramay's genius, he was unwilling to discress him for so pattry a sum, which he could so easily afford to remit. He wen went the length of saying that if Ramsay in as many minutes could. Ramsay in as many minutes could give him a rhyming answer to four questions which he would ask he would quit him of his rent altogether as a reward for so much quickness of mind. Allan professed his willingness to try, and a watch being laid upon the table the lated propounded his questions. and a watch being laid upon the table the laird propounded his questions, which were: "What does God love? What does the devil love? What does the world love? What do I love?" The poet within the specified time gave the proper answer, as follows: God laves man when he refrains from sin:

"It is a great mistake to conclude hat it is a law of nature that recent animals are all small and insignificant as compared with their representatives in the past," says a scientist. "That is simply not true. Recent horses are bigger than extinct ones and much bigger than the three toed and four toe ancestors of horses. Recent elephants are as big as any that have existed and much bigger than their early elephan-tine ancestors. There never has been any creature of any kind-mammal, reptile, bird or fish-in any geological period we know of so big as some of the existing whales."

THROW MEDICINE TO THE DOGS.

At best they are unpleasant, often useless. You have some disease of the nose, throat or lungs. Doctors would call it bronchitis, asthma or catarrh. The common root of these diseases is germ or microbe irritation,—Catarriozone not only decroys disease germs, it does more, it heals diseased and inflamed tissue. The disease is not only cured, but its return is forever prevented by using Catarrhozone, which is splendid also for coldes coughs and irritable throat. Remember, you inhate Catarrh -Nature's own cure—use no her but Catarrhozone—it's the best catarrh cure made.

Why Dubois wets a Statue Nice is to raise a monument to a cook -a Provencal chef, one Urbain Dubois. It is not for his soups, his entrees, his roasts or his pastry that Dubois is to be honored in stone. Provencals chiefly love his memory for his patriotism. What Dubois sacrificed on the altar of his country was what some would describe as a "mighty good berth." He was chef to the king of Prussia when that sovereign went to war with France. Immediately on the news reaching him the chief of the kitchen marked his disagreement with the chief of the state by resigning. Considering that he lost $12,000 a year, it was a hard step to take. And that is why Dubois is to have his statue.

The Pneumatic Hub. A good deal is being heard of the pneumatic hub which is to replace the ordinary rubber tire, with a great saving of rubber. The claim is that by the fitting of a pneumatic cushion around the hub the same effect, as far as easy running is concerned, is obtained as in the case of the ordinary rubber tire encircling the rim.

GRIP QUICKLI ANOCKED OUT.

Dr. Barnardo, the London philanthro-olst who died recently, had a startling way of protecting the papers upon his desk from the devastatingly tidy house-maid. In a wastepaper basket under the study table basked two snakes. This "worked like a charm," according to a personal friend of the doctor's.

HOW BIRDS SOAR.

The Kite a Master of the Art of Soaring. "In the summer of 1872 I was visiting on the Warm Springs reservation in eastern Oregon," says a writer. The residences of the government employees were in a deep valley between table lands through which the water courses had cut deep canyons. I climbed up on one of these tables, the edge of which was in most places perpen-dicular for ten, twenty and more feet, and as I stood there in a strong breeze blowing against the face of the slope a small hawk came gliding along eight or ten feet above the edge and following the course of the edge, and he kept on until he was little more than a rod away from me. He seemed to be making no effort except a little balancing and turning in order to steer himself. The explanation seemed to me very simple. Just there at the edge there was a strong, sharply ascending current which enabled him to use wind and gravity against each other.

"In the autumn of that year I went to Fuchau, China, and there I found the city frequented by a species of large bird which we call a kite. It seems to be half hawk, half buzzard, in its build and habits. Its flight is heavy and awkward, its wings being too big for its pectoral muscles, and their tips are not pointed like a hawk's, but broad and square across. But it is a master of the art of soaring. There are in Fuchau two hills which lie square across the path of the after. noon sea breeze. Here toward the close of a breezy autumn afternoon a dozen or a score of these kites will resort and have a genuine coasting

"These hillsides are quite steep, and upward current at the top. The kites come to the top and, starting from the eddy in the lee of the top, glide out into the uprushing current into the uprushing current, wings bal-ancing up and down and head and tail turning and twisting till they are in the heart of the upward current, and then they turn broadside to it and ar borne upward and backward seventyfive or a hundred feet. Then they de scend again into the eddy and again steer themselves out into the uprushing current. Throughout it all there is very little flapping of the wings."

ERRORS IN ILLUSTRATION.

How Easily They Are Made In Hurry of Preparation.

A Woman Soldier.

Women disguised as men have often served as soldiers. The following inscription is on a tombstone in the English town of Brighton: "In memory of Phoebe Hassel; born 1713, died 1821, aged 108 years. She served for many years as a private soldier in many parts of Europe, and at the battle of Fontenoy, fighting bravely, she received a bayonet wound in the left arm."
