Literature. THE FALSE LADY ISABEL.

I was a poor governess; a dependant in a noble house. I had many times seen the father of my two little darlings; I knew that he was handsome, though I seldom raised my eyes to his; I thought him unwontedly gracious, but that was all. They told me I was beautiful. Even the stately old housekeeper, stately to all but me, used to part my long hair with her slender fingers, and once she said, in a dreamy sort of a way, 'it's very fine and glossy, child, it's very soft and silky. In all the wide world, child, there is nothing like a beautiful face—and the Lord made man in his image—oh! be thankful, child, that you are lovely.

PRINTER'S PUZZIE.—As nobody can understand spoke in her cold way, the baronet came in, saying, 'don't frighten her, good Mrs. Hunt.' Even then, I did not think upon his kind glances and tender interest, as some girls would have thought.

The children, fair-haired darlings, how they loved all the children is the children of the control of the children of the c me! They were both beautiful; Grace was a fairy, sparkling-eyed child; Gertrude had deep, dark, shining eyes. They were well named. Gertrude was calm and reflective, given to strange sayings, and dreamy, mysterious thoughts; Grace was only happy when both dimpled hands were heaped with roses, and klases were showered on her round cheeks; she lived in an atmosphere of love.

I shall never forget that night. The hills were white with moonlight, and I wanted to pluck one violet to take with me. In that quiet hour, I knelt sob-bing over the little mound. A tall form stood beside me. I could not fear or dislike him then: me. I could not fear or dislike him then he was so pale, so sorrowful, as he said.

'Yes, oh! yes,' I murmured; 'you have been only too kind.'

'And my poor, motherless child! Would you leave her, Lillian?'

At that I lost all self-control.

he asked in stern tones.

'Lady Isabel!' I gasped, as I grew calm; and as far as my delicacy would let me, I gave her cruel language, word for word.'

'It is false!' he cried, taking my hand. 'So far from boasting that I knew you loved me, Lillian, I did not dare to believe that one so young, so beautiful, so good, and so gentle, might feel other than sentiments of friendship, for a man so much older and graver than herself.'

His voice had grown soft and musical. I was astonished—overwhelmed; my confidence deserted me.

trude? Lillian, tell me—can you love me well enough to marry me?'

Oh! heaven knows that I had long, long loved him, not daring to whisper it to myself in the darkest night; and over Gertrude's grave I answered yes.

Poor Lady Isabe!! She had trusted to her beauty, her gold, her power, and they had failed ther. When she first saw me with my noble husband, she grew white with anger, disappointment and terror that her duplicity had been discovered. She is unmarried to this day; and she loved the baronet herself.

Upon which the Pall Mall Gazette remarks:

"Country magistrates have such very odd notions, both of law and justice, that people are ready to believe almost any absurdity that is imputed to them. It turns out, however, that the Leominster bench has not been guilty of the folly of enforcing an obsolete provision of the criminal code against Sunday cricketers. Several boys, it is true, were lately fined 1s. each and costs for playing at cricket on Sunday, but the offence consisted, not on Sunday being the day on which the game was played, but in the wickets being set up in a field of mowing grass, where the lads were, in fact, trespassers. They would, as Mr. Hardy explained in the House of Commons, have been punished just the same field on any week day."

ADVERTIRESO.—It is assuing at times to observe the
