Putting Things Into Writing.

By RUTH CAMERON.

The jury of eminent artists and critics which decides what pictures shall be bought by the art galleries of France is required to put its reasons for buying each picture into writing.

Don't you think that's a very wise requirement. I do.

Not only because it makes it plain to the French people why each picture deserves to be bought, and renders them less likely to make a mistake.

Nothing in the world clears the mind on a subject like putting one's thoughts into writing.

When we think upon any matter we usually slur over a good many points especially those points on which we are all confused or which for any reason we do not like to consider.

If we put a thing into writing we cannot slur. The dim neutral grays in which we shrouded confused or unpleasant details must needs vanish when we set the thing down in black and white.

Did you ever try this method when you had some important decision to make?

I have, and I find it invaluable.

Suppose for instance, you are thinking of buying or renting a house

Hundreds of friendships and tokens of affection to sweetheart, wife, mother, sister and friend are embodied in lasting embrace with Trappell's Rings, the popularity of which is based upon their quality, finish and variety and beauty of design. Rings for men, women, boys and girls for every occasion. Gem Rings, Chased Rings, Signet Rings, Birthday Rings. Should you have a desire to get a ring of such design as you may desire yourself, or that you had seen somebody else wear, just take your design to Trappell; there is nothing impossible along these lines for his talented workmen. A splendid assortment of unset stones can be seen if your design calls for a Gem Ring. Ask to be shown the new White Sapphires. Home, Sweet Home.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old Swah." "There are two kinds of homes in this country. There is the home to which we go every evening to groan over the month's bills, cuss the furnace, complain about the toughness of the meat at dinner time and lay plans for escaping to the theatre or some other abode of joy. And there is "Home Sweet Home."

Most of us love our homes, but conceal the fact with Spartan firmness. But we all love our Home Sweet Home. It is the home which we have lost or mislaid, and on it we pour out all our sentiment and yearnings.

"Home Sweet Home" is either a thousand miles or twenty years away. It usually isn't much of a home to begin with, but after it recedes into the distance its owner begins to make improvements in it. He takes the draughts, sputtery floors and lazy beating stove out of it, does away with the leaky roof and the cellar which has ambition to become a mill pond in the spring and dismisses the loose and flappy wallpaper from its mind. Then he begins to add wings, porches, boudoirs, galleries, drawing rooms, flying balconies and conservatories to it. He runs a mental vacuum cleaner through it, taking out all the harsh words and quarrels which have stuck around from former times and fills it full of family love, happiness, hope, affection and industry. When all this is done, he plants the Garden of Eden around it, paints it in luminous colors and then stands off and admires his work. After he has looked at it a while he breaks which he is now living has only four-down and cries because the place in teen rooms and silver-plated plumbing.

John Howard Payne owned the first real Home Sweet Home. It was the only home he had, and he talked about it so much that every one began acquiring them. It is a great pleasure to have a Home, Sweet Home, but it is little hard on the mere home. If we could only be half as fond of our homes as we are of them later when they become our Home Sweet Homes, we would enjoy life more and our families might possibly enjoy us.

The cutaway coat still continues. Rattine has almost become a staple fabric. Flowers are used chiefly on picture hats. New dancing frocks barely reach the ankle. Lace and net waists are being much worn.

Divorced Life

By Helen Hessing Fuesde

An Offer With a String Attached

Marian timidly pushed through the half open door of the booking office of the Eclipse Vaudeville Circuit, and entered.

A pale, plain-faced girl, seated at a desk in the corner of the office-like room, looked up from the pages of "The Clipper" with a tired "How do you do?"

Marian asked for the booking agent, and was ushered into a private office where sat a dark, well-groomed young man, with alert eyes and clean-cut features. He rose, and listened attentively to her inquiry regarding work, and to her frank reference to nothing but a bit of amateur experience.

clearly Marian, who had listened to the straight-forward recital with absorbed attention.

"I think you'll get it," was the answer. "I happen to be making up the casts right now for a one act vaudeville sketch, and I need a competent income. If you'd consider a proposition to join such a troupe for a few months, I believe I could give you

"You have a beautiful and effective speaking voice," said the dramatic teacher.

"I see," he replied thoughtfully. "Would you mind reading something for me, so that I can get an idea of your dramatic style?"

Though she had not expected a request of the sort, Marian pulled herself together and recited part of Porth's famous speech, the only thing she could remember on the spur of the moment. She surprised herself by doing it as well as she did, and felt that she was interesting her listener.

"Billey!" he exclaimed when she had finished. "That's mighty fine work. You've got a beautiful and effective speaking voice. With just a little more training, you'll be great."

"Do you think so?" she asked, flushing with satisfaction at his praise.

"No question about it," he assured her. "You have the makings of a very competent actress."

"But how am I to find an opening?" she demanded.

"Leave that to me. It's my business to find openings for promising players. I was instrumental in getting Billy Burke her first engagement, to say nothing of a dozen other well-known names of a string of actresses, many of whom Marian was familiar with. "Why, I've won the confidence of theatrical managers throughout the country. When I send a person to them, they know it's not a flatterer. This is a small time vaudeville circuit, as you know, but it is the stepping-stone for dozens of real artists into the big time, and into legitimate drama."

"I'm just crazy for a chance," declared Marian.

the part, from what I've seen of you. Of course, there wouldn't be a great deal of money in it at the start, but it's a chance. Forty dollars a week is about all we could pay you."

Forty dollars a week! The sum sounded enchanting to Marian—especially for her first engagement.

"That would be splendid," she answered, trying to hide her eagerness.

"I would suggest, however," said the other, "that you go to some competent coach, for say a week's voice training. You'll have time to do so before the rehearsals begin. There are a few defects in your voice control that could be readily corrected."

"To whom could I go?" demanded Marian.

"I'll give you a note to Mr. Walter Hartmann, if you like. He's by all odds the best dramatic coach in the city."

"If you please," urged Marian.

The booking agent dashed off the note of introduction on the back of one of his cards, and bade Marian call on him again in a week's time.

WALT MASON'S DAILY STORY.

DISCOURAGEMENT.

"People shouldn't permit themselves to be discouraged," remarked the retired merchant. "There's no excuse for it, since the right sort of philosophy is free to all and easy to acquire."

"You've been reading some of those doggone sussing books," commented the hotelkeeper. "It's easy for you to talk that way. You have a bundle stowed away, big enough to keep you in comfort all the rest of your life, and then some, and you haven't anything to worry about. You can dance and sing all the livelong day, but life isn't such a soft snap for everybody."

A few minutes ago Mrs. Magpie went past this hotel, and I was just thinking of what a hard run of luck she has had, when you began twittering about the right kind of philosophy. Mrs. Magpie has been married four times and hasn't a husband to show for it. She's never been through the divorce mill. Evertime she got married she thought she had a husband who would be a stayer, yet we find her a chronic widow, just when she needs a husband the most way, for she is waxing old and needs a companion to lean on.

"Her first husband was Tom Tantrum. They were married in Kansas, and went to housekeeping on a quarter section of land Tom had bought on time. He was a worker from Workerville, and if he had lived would have been a rich man, but when they were married a year he was wiped out. One day Mrs. Tantrum, while washing dishes, heard a roaring sound as though a freight train was approaching the house. She looked out doors and saw Tom lifting for his life across country, pursued by a funnel shaped cloud. Just imagine the emotions of that poor woman as she saw the tornado gaining on her husband at the rate of a mile a minute. Finally it overtook him, and she had a last glimpse of him protruding around about three miles high. They never did find him, and it's a mystery what the storm did with him. A few months later his hat was found in another state, but that was all.

"After a decent interval she married Jim Trump. He was another good man. No woman could ask a better husband. One day he took her to the county fair, where there was a balloon in which an aeronaut was going to give a demonstration. Jim was a daring sort of fellow, so he shinned up a rope and got into the car of the balloon, just to see how it felt up there, and while he was grinning down at his wife the balloon broke loose and drifted away and never was seen again. It went straight north and it is supposed that Jim may have landed among the Eskimos, and is busy there now, eating blubber and gunning for their all speculation. She had him declared dead by the courts, and then she married Jasper Mergue, another excellent citizen.

"Jasper took her to Oklahoma, where he had a job as a well shooter. A man of that profession goes logging the countryside in a spring wagon loaded with nitroglycerine in cans. His wife wanted him to retire from such hazardous work and get a situation as a book agent, but he laughed her fears to scorn, saying he was just as safe as any other man. Then one afternoon she heard an explosion that shook the leaves off the trees, and knew the worst had happened. She wasn't at all surprised when a committee called, a few hours later, to inform her that Jasper's cargo had exploded, and the only relic they could find was a hole in the ground.

"Maybe your doggone philosophy would have been a great help to her, but she was plumb discouraged, and she married Zebulon Magpie because it had become a habit with her. Zebulon undertook to cross a river that was in flood, and it bore him away on its bosom to the ocean wild and wide. Not a hide or hair of him ever was found. That poor woman has told me that she could bear up under her load of sorrow if she only had a grave or two she could weep over and plant rosebushes on, but this hoop has been denied her. All she has to show for
