PEPYS BEHIND THE SCENES.

March 4th (Shrove Tuesday)-Up and find a great fog, and the air foul with it. A great cold of my head so I can scarce breathe with it, but mus abroad and to the office. The Enquiry still on the Model Farm, but this farm think, ill-named, being by no manner of means a model for others to follow. Little news to be had to-day and is the dullest I have found this year, nor can men find food for discourse even in the Enquiry. Haye tells me of trouble at the rocksheds, being that the wage is cut down from $12 to $10 and the workers there do protest and much talk of publick parade and remonstrances. Keeping within doors in the afternoon, I took occasion to teach cook the right manner of cooking pancakes, and being presently served, were, I believe, the best I ever eat in my life. All my resolve is for this Lent, beginning tomorrow, that I will abstain from liquors and smoking, which I like ill to do, but my wife will have me do it, and in her turn, will abstain from going to her Bridge Club. So to bed, pouring on my pillow much oil of eucalyptus, whereby I may breathe the more easily.

March 5th. (Ash Wednesday)-Much rain all the day, and a horrid fog, which makes my rhume all the worse, so that I must carry my kerchief drenched in oil of eucalyptus, to the great discontent of all with whom have discourse. To Water Street and meet Mr. Taylor. He tells me how he will go to the Sealfishery and did make me the promise of a whitecoat, which I hope he will bring me, being a thing I have long desir ed. Anon to the Club, and to play at billyards with Colonial Secretary Halfyard, and to discourse with him of the House, its opening, and of the Tariff Commission. He does not know when the Legislature will meet but thinks it will be towards the end of this month, but only if the Enquiry comes to an end soon. And indeed, when this will be, no man can tell, albeit the Model Farm investigation ends to-day, and haste will be made with what remains to be enquired in to. Despatches out of England tell how W. Leach, the Under Secretary for Air, did say in the House that there will be no increase in the air orce. This the silliest thing, being that the air force will play the biggest part in the next warr, and for er own protection England must keep pace with other countries. Home betimes and to drink a hot potion which my wife makes me for my rhume, and so to bed.

Lore of Lotteries.

See here the causes why in London So many men are made and undone.

Many narrators have told the story of the old-time lotteries, the disreputable ancestors of the sweepstake that is so popular nowadays. It seems that Queen Elizabeth set the lottery ball rolling in 1567 by proclaiming "a yery rich lottery-general of money, plate, and certain sorts of merchandise," the object being to find cash for public works-so it was proclaimed. She stopped at nothing to "provoke the people" to the novel adventure, by royal proclamations striving to lay low "any scruple, suspition, doubt, fault, or misliking." Though the first prize was £5,000 the people were over-inclined to "suspition." So the Queen sent out fretful mandates to mayors and justices, and appointed a sort of advertising agent to beat up investors, "so that there shall not one parish escape": a pretty bit of royal dragooning for a gamble.

A Water-Gamble. Kings James and Charles each anctioned lotteries, one to benefit the colony of Virginia, another to pay for London's water-supply. There were lotteries of all sorts: for plate, armour, jewels ,and books; there was even one for the deer of Sion Park. In 1699 a thousand pounds was offered as a lottery-prize, the shares being only a penny each. In 1718 a million and a half pounds were subscribed in an unusually attractive gamble. Fortune-tellers reaped a sideharvest by predicting lucky numbers. The Spectator told a story of a dissenter, a great enemy of popery, who believed that bad men are the most fortunate in this world, and offered to lay two to one on the number 666 against any other, 666 being, he said, the "Number of the
