

BYRNE BUILDING, WATER STREET WEST
CORNER QUEEN STREET.

Ladies!

JUST COME A LITTLE FURTHER WEST AND
SEE OUR LINE. READ
BELOW!

Coats

Splendid Heavy Winter Coats, Fur trimmed and plain.
All sizes; shades of Brown, Fawn, Grey, Navy and Black—in Velour and Blanket Cloth. Prices Right!
Call and see them!

Dresses

New and Attractive! In Velvet, Serge, Crepe-de-
Chene and Canton Crepe; shades of Brown, Pansy, Cinnamon and Black. See our price and styles!

Skirts

A fine assortment to open, in Pleated and Plain effects.

Special Attention

Given to Outport
customers. Postage
FREE on all orders.

Popular Clothing Store

Opening Announcement!

New Goods! New Management! New Display!

SHOPPERS! READ THE FOLLOWING! IT WILL INTEREST YOU!
AND WE KNOW IT WILL PAY YOU TO GIVE US YOUR ATTENTION!

We beg to announce that we have opened a New Business in that Store recently occupied by Mrs. Byrne, and we are now showing an attractive line of all kinds of MEN'S, LADIES' and CHILDREN'S WEAR. Listed here are some of the articles we are offering, and EVERY WEEK we are opening new goods direct from New York.

We Invite Your Inspection

CALL AND SEE OUR PRICES! WE WILL BE GLAD TO GIVE YOU OUR BEST ATTENTION, AND WILL ENDEAVOUR TO PLEASE YOU.

HATS

In a variety of styles, and all the newest colours.

Come and select your style and shade.

BLOUSES!

Dainty Waists in wash materials; also in Crepe and Tricosham.

SWEATERS!

Shades and styles that will suit you.

WE ALSO HANDLE A FULL RANGE OF INCIDENTALS, SUCH AS GLOVES, SPATS, CAMI-SOLES, ETC.

OPPOSITE PARKER & MONROE'S
WEST END STORE.

MEN!

SEE THE POPULAR
STYLES AT THE POPU-LAR STORE!

Overcoats

Warm and comfortable, in Naps and Reversible Cloths assorted shades and sizes. Let us show you our values! Get our prices.

Suits

A good variety of sizes and qualities. We will be glad to fit you.

Caps, Braces, Ties, Hose

and many other accessories.

Boys' Suits

To fit the youth or little chap. Bring along the boy.

Children's Coats

We can fit them from age 2 to 9; also Misses' Sizes from 10 to 14. Prices reasonable!

Remember

Our Store is further West, and we are making another Corner POPULAR.

Harry Wills Wins Over Johnson

IN FIRST ROUND OF BOUT.

Iowa's Seconds Threw in Towel
After 2 Minutes of Fighting.

Newark, Oct. 26.—Harry Wills, negro challenger of Jack Dempsey for the world's heavy weight boxing title, won a victory somewhat out of ordinary interest in the first round of a 12-round match here to-night. Johnson's seconds hurled a towel into the ring two minutes after the start of the round while Johnson was standing firmly on both feet. For the time the crowd was in an uproar and could not comprehend what had happened, but the referee, Harry Lewis, said that he had to award the fight to Wills when the towel came flying into the ring.

Newark, N.J., Oct. 26.—Harry Wills, negro heavy weight, scored a technical knockout over Floyd Johnson of Iowa, in the first round of a 12-round match here to-night—the sudden ending leaving 9,000 spectators stunned.

Johnson received Wills' mighty left to the body and head just as the bout started and he appeared worried. The right to the head drove him to the ropes but he withstood the attack and ventured to the centre of the ring while the towel floated from his corner.

Referee Harry Lewis, Wills and Johnson all gazed at the towel, in a mingled astonishment and the throng rose to its feet in clamor. Lewis took Johnson by the arm and led him to his corner and then informed the press he could do nothing but award the fight to Wills after that towel had dropped into the arena. As the fighters departed, protests came from the crowd which had only seen two minutes of contest. "Fake, fake," came the cry. "That's the end of boxing in New Jersey." But as a matter of fact Johnson was not far from oblivion when the victorious Wills appeared. The negro had gone at him smilingly as they tapped each other lightly in the centre of the ring. He was fully confident. A half minute of sparring preceded the first blow of the contest, a drive to the body. Then he wrestled his foe to the ropes and drove a right punch to the chin, after which Johnson became cautious and bared away. Another left found his jaw and he backed to the ropes to receive a solid show of rights and lefts to head and body.

But the Iowa, known in the past as the "Bulldog of the West," continued to throw his arms out before him and gradually worked to the centre of the ring as his seconds went into action.

Dr. William Silverstein, physician for the State Boxing Commission, examined Johnson after he had reached his dressing room and pronounced him in good condition. The blow that rocked him was a left jab to the head, according to his handlers. Wills had been a top-heavy favorite to win by a knockout in five rounds for Johnson, once in line for heavy-weight honors, had deteriorated as a boxer since his defeat three years ago by Jess Willard in seven rounds at the Yankee stadium.

"I was punch-drunk," Johnson said in his dressing room after to-night's bout. "Wills' left caught me on the right side of the neck and left me dizzy. I didn't know where I was." The weights: Wills, 215; Johnson, 203.

George Courtney, of Oklahoma, and Charley Arthur, New York, middle weights, fought a rattling ten round contest as a preliminary. Courtney proved the better boxer.

The referee stopped the semi-final between Frank Moody, of Wales, and Homer Robinson, Pittsburgh, negro, in the seventh round because the going was too slow to suit him.

Dead Man's Ashes at Dinner

LONDON, Oct. 23.—A dead man has figured as a guest at an extraordinary banquet in London.
About a year ago one of an insupportable trio of wealthy City merchants known as "Jimmy," died, and, in accordance with his last wish, was cremated.

For years the men had celebrated each other's birthday at a famous restaurant in Regent street, and last week, on the anniversary of "Jimmy's" birthday, the two other companions paid a visit to a crematorium in the country and asked for the urn containing the ashes of their departed friend.

The caretaker said he could not allow them to remove the urn, but after the two men had related the story of their life-long association he finally agreed.

"Jimmy Is With Us."
At the cafe that evening dinner for three was ordered. "But," exclaimed the puzzled waiter, who had known the trio for years, "there are only two of you."
"Dinner for three," repeated one of the men, "for Jimmy is with us to-night." And then the waiter's glance fell on the urn, which had been placed on the table in front of a vacant chair.

All "Jimmy's" favorite dishes were ordered and served; Champagne was ordered, and "Jimmy" was toasted royally.

Subjects in which "Jimmy" had been interested were discussed. Old days were recalled and old adventures recounted.

"It was the most pathetic and touching incident throughout my career," said the waiter, "and I have never felt so moved in my life, for I had known the three for many years; they might have been brothers."

The affair was conducted with such dignity and respect that there was no suggestion of impropriety.

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

RICHARD HUDNUT THREE FLOWERS FACE POWDER

The Face Powder that is Different
Having the Particularly Desirable Quality of Discreetness and perfumed with the Distinctive and Appealing odor of Three Flowers
in All Popular Shades

The Beautiful Woman

takes the greatest care to protect and nourish her skin and not to give the fatal wrinkles a chance to form. After cleansing her face she rubs in with an upward and outward motion a generous amount of Three Flowers Skin and Tissue Cream. The pure oils it contains are quickly absorbed by the tissues. The lady whose skin is inclined to be dry finds in this splendid cosmetic the means to replace the natural oil her skin lacks, while the woman whose skin is inclined to be too oily finds that a thorough cleansing with Three Flowers Skin and Tissue Cream opens the overloaded pores and helps them throw off the excessive oils. Thus does this beautiful cream benefit every woman's skin.—Oct. 22, 1925.

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

FOR ALL KIDNEY DISEASES
RHEUMATISM
BRIGHT'S DISEASE
DIABETES
GRAVEL
OBESITY
MIGRAINE
HEADACHE
NEURALGIA
BRUISES
SCALDS
BURNS
WOUNDS
CUTS
FROSTBITE
SUNBURN
POISON
AND ALL OTHER AFFECTIONS

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

1067 THE PHARMACY

THE BEGGAR.

On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beggar and

all day my heart was light, and I thought recording angels would jot that transaction down. When I read the evening paper I could feel my face grow pale, for that beggar was arrested, and was in the city jail. It was said he faked his blindness; he had money salted down, he could buy nor miss the rubles, all the poets in the town. Then I felt a wave of anger surge through my embattled frame, and I swore I'd never fall for any other beggar's game. "Nevermore," I sadly muttered, "will I do without a smoke, that a mendicant may fatten, with my coin, his greasy poke. And no more I'll walk the pavement while my wiser neighbors ride, that arrogant phony blind man may have cake and oysters fried." But while grumbling I remembered how that quarter thrown away, made me swell with conscious virtue through the long hours of a day. Then I canceled all those pledges, I expunged them in a trice, and I said, "That snow-white feeling, it is cheap at any price! Little boots it if that beggar has the assets of Jean D.; when he deigned to take my quarter, surely he uplifted me!"

THE BEGGAR.
On a busy city corner sat an old blind beggar man, and I placed a half-diminished penny in his little rusty can; then a glow of conscious virtue lighted up my careworn face, and my head was proudly lifted, and my heart was good and warm. For the quarter I had used; it would buy some fresh cigars, it would purchase noonday luncheon, pay my passage on the cars; but I gave it to the beg