Plans to Keep American Settler Across the Line

Secretary Wilson of Department of Agriculture Trying to Find Farms for the Wanderers in the Forest Area of the Western States

(By Arthur C. Johnson in Washington Post.)

Deeply impressed by the fact that many hundreds of American farmers, imbued with pioneering spirit, are passing over opportunities for making homes in the West and flocking to the frontier in Western Canada, the secretary of agriculture is preparing to inaugurate a system whereby settlers will be induced to occupy arable tracts within the forest reserves.

As a starter on this policy, Secretary Wilson has already dispatched Chief Forester Graves on a tour of the forest reserves in the West with orders to serve notice on all forest supervisors and rangers that hereafter everything possible must be done by them to aid settlers not only to find farms within the forest reserves, but to acquire these tracts and become bona-fide citizens of Western Canada. According to the Secretary's determination, many of the burdens heretofore imposed upon settlers in demonstrating the possibilities of farming tracts have been discovered within the confines of national forests are to be lifted, and the forestry employees are to be required to exert every effort to people such portions of the reserves as exhibit any signs whatever of being of value for the raising of products.

It can be definitely stated that it is the intention of the department of agriculture to carry this policy to the extent of actually removing and disposing of merchantable timber from tracts where the standing growths are not necessary to conserve water supply, and turning said lands over to settlers for occupancy and improvement.

Welcome News for the West

The news of this stand by the department will be received throughout the west with acclamation, for one of the chief curses directed against the forest reserve policy heretofore has been in relation to the zealousness of the administrators in maintaining the national forests as sacred expanses, wherein a settler must laboriously prove his right to enter and take up farming land.

Although directed from Washington to grant the pioneering farmer the right to enter agricultural tracts within the forests, it is charged that the rangers and supervisors have been required to lay forth such an array of "red tape" proceedings in these instances that many a pioneer settler in which the settler carried his family and all of his worldly effects, has wound its way wearily onward to land where open arms awaited the man who showed his intention of breaking in the wild soil and fighting out his livelihood.

It has been discovered that Uncle Sam has lost many an inhabitant for his sparsely settled regions in the west through the sheer disinclination of that individual to go through the maze of regulations which the forest service has imposed upon him, and through the fear of having his claims entirely disputed in the end and being thrown out penniless to wander into more hospitable territory.

Through the fact that the average homesteader and agriculturist is not a protesting individual, the pronouncement of a forest ranger that the tract he has selected is more valuable for forest purposes than for farming also most invariably has caused him to fold his tent and steal away with the idea that forest reserves are sacred territory. Such protests and appeals have come to Washington in the past for a reversal of this strenuous policy of fastening upon the settler the burden of seeking his home in the reserves and of imposing upon him the expense of waiting for a decision as to his right to occupy the land he has picked out to have been invariably met with the assertion that the man who is obtaining a home can surely have the pluck and endurance to fight out his right to it when he finds it, and that in order to keep the national forests from despoliation the government must adopt a cautious course to ward all comers.

Secretary Wilson himself realizes the hardships to be met by the man who is wandering over the country in search of a homestead, for this own parents made their way from the East to Iowa in the early fifties in an humble wagon drawn by an ox team and entered that state before it had a railroad within its border. He believes that the government should place as little discouragement as possible in the way of the individual who is thus willing to cast his fortunes with the soil, and he has resolved accordingly that while the ends for which forest reserves were created shall be conserved, the man who desires to settle within them shall be given every opportunity within reason to take up land and proceed to reap the fruits of his industry. He has ordered that forest rangers shall in the future be directed in every way possible the man who is searching for a home, and if there are suitable home tracts, in the lands which are now reserved from entry on account of the presence of a small amount of salable timber, the government will dispose of that timber and give up the land, providing its agricultural improvement can be foreseen.

The secretary sees many advantages in this system of settler encouragement. Not only will the States gain taxable property, he reasons, but the increase in the number of inhabitants will serve to keep the forest fire in check. It will be possible also to do away with many so-called ranger stations—those extensive open tracts which are now being maintained for the support of the forest employees in the national forests is supposed to be the initial effort of the government to remove the excuses which these Americans have made for not making settlement upon lands which are equally productive within their own country.

Action may soon follow in the regions where vast strips of land are withdrawn from entry, and awaiting the action of congress in regard to the conservation of water-power sites. It is realized that through the extensive system of land withdrawals for forest reserves, reclamation projects, and conservation movements in general, the United States has perhaps gone much further than was anticipated in the discouragement of western settlement.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE TO TRAVEL THROUGH TEXAS

Technical Education Will Be Carried to the Farmers Throughout the State.

College Station, Tex., April 29.—An agricultural school on wheels is an experiment to be started by the joint efforts of the passenger traffic department of the Central-East and West lines and the A. and M. College of Texas, the time for the first trip of the train having been fixed for early in August of this year.

It is proposed to equip a train of eight to ten cars, carry exhibits of agriculture, live stock, soils, horticulture, fertilizers, etc. These exhibits will be collected by the heads of the various departments at the college, and will not be in the nature of exhibits of a car that is trying to get settlers, but will be to show actual farmers what can be done in this state in the matter of cultivation.

Will Visit All Sections

An itinerary of ten days or two weeks will be arranged, the start to be made from the college directly after the close of the Farmers' Congress. The exhibits that are to be taken on the train will be shown to the congress, and then loaded into the train for this trip. Just what section of the state will be first visited has not yet been determined, but the proceeds in the nature of an educational proposition. The agricultural education giving is to be taken directly to the men who can not come to the college. Stops will not be made at every station, because time could not be given to every one, but a central point of each country will be selected, and word sent out into all parts of the coming of the train, and in this way the farmers can learn of it and be on hand.

One of the big features of the train will be the live stock types that will be taken. There are quite a number of types now at the college which are used all the time in class work, and Prof. Burns believes that he will be able to get more from the breeds in the state who will readily endorse this scheme.

No schedule has been yet arranged, but one will be gotten up right away. The railway people are very enthusiastic about this matter, and believe it will be a great good for the people, and will result in bringing the agricultural college to the folk who stay at home and pay the taxes that maintain the college.

A similar liberal policy will be put in force in regard to the prospecting and the locating of mineral deposits within forest reserves.

The fact that more than 57,000 farming individuals went into Canada from the United States inside of eleven months and settled on the agricultural tracts there, undoubtedly has made an impression upon President Taft and his cabinet. The activity of Secretary Wilson in welcoming settlers to the national forests is supposed to be the initial effort of the government to remove the excuses which these Americans have made for not making settlement upon lands which are equally productive within their own country.

STOESSEL'S WIFE IS FORCED TO PAY FOR PORT ARTHUR

Queen of War Times Provision Shop Required to Settle Old Bill

St. Petersburg, April 29.—Ruth Stoessel, has just been ordered by St. Petersburg civil court to pay $2,000, or about $22, to Mrs. Stoessel, a widow of a Russian officer. She began in 1906. It proved to be the prowess of Gen. Stoessel's wife, the queen of the Port Arthur provision shop during the Japanese siege of that city. Mrs. Stoessel had already admitted the attacks of beleaguered citizens complained to the government officials she had worked a corner in foodstuffs, got her husband, as commander of the fortress, to fix the selling price of food in Port Arthur.

Mrs. Stoessel informed the court that at the outbreak of the war she owned a cow and two calves. When the siege began she left Port Arthur and handed over her dairy business to her husband, who died soon afterward. Mrs. Stoessel thereupon appropriated the milk for herself, and the government officials estimated that she sold a thousand rubles worth of milk before settling the animal for rubles.

Mrs. Stoessel admitted selling the cow, but declared she had sold the milk to the wounded. Moreover, she said, was injured when she found it.

The court decided that she must refund the price of the cow, 120 rubles, and Mrs. Stoessel had to pay the price of the suit. She did not receive payment for her milk claim.
