Local Markets. London, Tuesday, Feb. 6. There was a paucity of far-mer-folk and purchasers on the market this morning. The storm of Sunday affected the attendance to a considerable extent. Sleighing is reported to be very bad at present throughout the surrounding country. A fairly large amount of butter was brought in, but prices remained as before. A larger supply of eggs than usual was on the market, but the cold weather will probably curtail this supply. From the meat and poultry stands the usual Tuesday offerings were made, with no variations in prices.

Debate on the Speech From the Throne -Loyalty of the French-Canadians -Canada's Prosperity.

Ottawa, Feb. 6.-In the commons yesterday, Mr. Isaac Gould (the new member for West Ontario) moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne, commenting on the prosperity of the people of the Dominion, and showing that the trade of the past year was $81,000,000 greater than in

Mr. Victor Geoffrion, the new member for Chambly and Vercheres, in seconding the address, testified to the loyalty of the French Canadians. They wished to see the British flag float on every sea, and hoped and prayed for the success of British arms in South Africa. Sir Charles Tupper followed with a three-hours' speech. He complained bitterly of the policy of the government in connection with the sending of the Canadian troops to South Af-rica. The government, in his opinion, should foot the entire expenditure in connection with the maintenance of the Canadian troops. He believed that this was the general opinion in the country. "Mr. Tarte, said the opposition leader, "is not in unison with the patriotic sentiment of the people. He was strongly in opposition to sending a contingent." The speaker characterized some of Mr. Tarte's sayings "as disloyalty, pure and simple." The disloyalty, pure and simple." The government had shirked from its duty to the mother country in her hour of

tria. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, after paying th usual compliments to the mover and seconder of the address, and congrat-ulating Sir Charles Tupper upon his hale and hearty appearance, went on to criticise the opposition leader upon the length of his speech in general, although in this instance he had squeezed his remarks into the space of less than three hours. He had no fault to find with Sir Charles for confining his observations to the question of the war in South Africa. That honorable gentleman had found fault with the government, not for when the south deposits the south for the manner. what it had done, but for the manner in which it had done it, and for not having gone far enough. Sir Charles blamed the government further for delays, but that was no crime, seeing that the whole question demanded to be carefully weighed. Would it have been constitutional for the government to have acted in the matter until asto have acted in the matter until assured that it had a strong public sen-timent behind it? The legislatures of Australia were in session when the war broke out, and they could act quickly; but the parliament of Canada had prorogued without making any appropriation. So that without assurance of a strong public sympathy behind it the government would have been criminal to put its hand in the treasury, no matter how worthy the object. "The press" which supports the honorable gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) had done its best to denounce and misrepresent the course of the gov-While all Canadians held the views he himself expressed at the Imperial Institute, there were many Canadians who were not ready to take part in England's econdary wars in all parts of the world. One of these Canadians was Sir Charles Tupper himself. In an article in the Nineteenth Century for October, 1891, on "The Federation of the Empire," Sir Charles maintained that the best way to bring It about was not a direct contribution by the colonies towards the British army and navy. Writing again in 1893, to Cassimir Dickson, secretary of the Imperial Federation League, Sir Charles Tupper declared it was false to say that Canada has not largely contributed to the defense of the empire, seeing the large amount spent up-on railways and like means of communication; and later he had pointed to the expenditure of Canada upon her militia as a full discharge of her duty to the empire. But Sir Charles has since changed his mind. Sir Charles Tupper—No, no Sir W. Laurier—Well, his honorable friend's both opinions have just been stated in the hearing of the house. He himself had no fault to find with Sir Charles if he thought Canada better able to contribute today than in 1885.

But Sir Charles should not expect every man to be able to turn a corner as quickly as he could. As to his own position in this matter it was this: He was not going to say that Canada should take part in no for-eign war of Britain's, or that it should take part in all wars. He was disposed to look at each case on its merits, and when he saw the main cause of this was the refusal of the Transvaal to grant privileges and rights which are held sacred in Canada, and saw, too, the wide-spread en-thusiasm evoked in Canada, the government decided to send a contingent, and one was sent immediately. When the colonial secretary's dispatch of Oct. 3 was received, announcing the acceptance of colonial offers of assistance, the governor-general was in New York, and upon his return, on the 12th, it was taken up, and two days after an order was sent out for the mobilization of the first contingent. after an order was first contingent. mobilization of the first contingent. True, that was in opposition to the opinion he had expressed in the Toronto Globe, but he had confidence in the attitude of parliament. On the 30th the guns of old Quebec thunder- of pure and fresh drugs and medicines? We cater specially for family dispensing trade to which we dedicate our pest energies and talents. ed a farewell salute to the departing Canadian soldiers. He admitted that all along he had hoped for peace. Continuing, Sir Wilfrid defended the "no precedent" stipulation in the order in council as a wise provision, inasmuch as it left Canada free to act or not to act in future cases, just as she pleased to judge each future case on its ed—to judge each future case on its merits. Indeed, it embodied the principle of Canadian independence expressed in Kipling's poem:

'Daughter am I in my mother's house, but mistress in my own:"

"The gates are mine to open, the gates are mine to open, the gates are mine to close."

As for the objection that Canada should pay all the expenses of the contingent, he was surprised at Sir Charles' moderation in expressing it. He had been led to expect an amendment to that effect. But Sir Charles was a man of broken promise. (Laughter.) It was not, however, a mere question of money, Canada having decided to do her best to fight the empire's battles, a few dollars more or less didn't count. The questiton of the full payment of the cona to ascertain what was the arrangement between the Australian colonies and the British Government in respect to the payment of the men.

The reply received was: "The same as with Canada." In no case was a colony paying its own troops. Why, then, Sir Charles Tupper's attempt to make political capital out of this matter? The true patriotism was to fall in with the imperial government's plans, under which the smallest of her colonies came in under the same terms as the largest. Our men were in the field as British soldiers, just as much as the Lancashires or the Highlanders. To have the Canadian Tommy Atkins re-ceiving 2 shillings a day while the British Tommy Atkins got only 1 shilling would be subversive of discipline. Therefore, what the government proposed to do was to ask parliament to vote sufficient to make up the difference between the Canadian and imperial pay, the amount to form a fund which the families, or the soldiers themselves would receive upon their return. In conclusion, the premier summarized the situation in South Africa, which had led to the present struggle; the re-fusal of the Transvaal Dutch to grant to British citizens of the Dutch Repubto British citizens of the Dutch Republic the same rights accorded to Dutch subjects in the British colonies of the Cape, Natal and Rhodesia. The issue was now, he said, in the hands of a higher power, and the participation of the colonies in the struggle was to prove to the world that the unity of the empire was a real and living fact.
