THE MARKETS

Local Market.

London, Thursday, June 28.
All staples, except strawberries, were supplied in very meager quantities this morning, and little interest was manifested in anything else. Little difficulty was experienced in disposing of the berries, though the offerings were abundant. They were all large and firm. The price most generally obtained was 6½ cents. Cherries were supplied more profusely than heretofore, and found ready sale at from 5 to 6 cents per quart. The trade in eggs and butter was inactive. Supplies were small, and there was little demand; prices remained unchanged. A similar apathy was noticeable in the meat stands, where offerings, although not large, were sufficient for all requirements. A small amount of poultry was offered. The birds that are being offered are not of the most tempting kind, and trade was slow. The all-prevailing tone throughout the market was one of lamentation for the destruction wrought by last night's storm.

A. M. HAMILTON & SON'S REPORT.
Wheat, white, per bu. 68½¢ to 72¢

Today's grain market was a quiet one, very few loads of anything offering. Wheat brought $1.20 and oats 93¢; demand good. Hay was scarcer than usual and in very good demand; sellers held the price very firm at $3.00 dressed and live hogs were quiet; no live offered and very few dressed. The price is unchanged at $6.25 for the former and $1.75 to $1.85 for the latter. Indications are for lower prices.

TORONTO TO THE FRONT.
plendid Showing Made by Dodd's Kidney Pills in Queen City.

Toronto, June 25.—It is interesting to note that this city, the headquarters of Dodd's Kidney Pills in Canada, and the place where they were first discovered, keeps well in the front as regards the number of those cured in the towns and cities of Ontario. As Dodd's Kidney Pills have since made friends all over the civilized world, this fact is of wide and significant interest, showing that Dodd's Kidney Pills retain their hold on public esteem purely on their tried merits.

Alexander Brown, 119 Elizabeth street, says: "I have been troubled with rheumatism for three years, and with pains in my back. I have tried several remedies, but could not get any relief. I have used two boxes of Dodd's

DOMINION PARLIAMENT LABOR BUREAU

Mr. Mulock's Labor Bill Given a First Reading—Measure in the Interests of the Worker—A Labor Gazette To Be Published Monthly.

Ottawa, June 27.—The postmaster-general, who is rapidly winning laurels for the government by his excellent labor legislation, this morning introduced his conciliation bill, as it is briefly termed, and lucidly explained its purpose. One of the objects of the measure is to promote the settlement of trade disputes and differences that arise from time to time between employers and employees, and between different classes of employers; by the aid of conciliators or boards of conciliation. The hope is entertained that the application of this method may in many instances prevent strikes and lockouts, and in cases where strikes occur bring about a speedy and satisfactory settlement. The bill also proposes to establish a department of labor, whose duty it shall be to gather statistical and other information affecting labor, and to provide for its publication, in a form accessible to the people generally. In order to carry out that object, a monthly labor gazette will be published, which will occupy the same position towards labor as does the report on agriculture with regard to the farming community, and the trade and commerce report in regard to the commercial world. This gazette will not be a medium for the expression of opinion, but for the registration of statistics and facts, and the relation of labor matters. The introduction of this legislation by Mr. Mulock gave great satisfaction to the majority of the members of the house, and more particularly to the representatives who have taken a special interest in labor problems. It speedily became evident, however, that the opposition were deeply chagrined at finding the bill was so complete, so beneficial in character, and so acceptable to the commercial and laboring classes.

Mr. Foster did not dare to openly oppose the bill, but he attacked the government under the plea that the postmaster-general had delayed the bringing down of the measure until almost the last hours of the session. Mr. Mulock in his explanation had made a much more detailed statement than is usual when a bill is first submitted to the house, but the explanation was found fault with, he said, the postmaster-general had not given information. It was quite clear that Mr. Foster was sorely perplexed to find grounds for criticism when he addressed himself to such a satisfactory bill. He would have taken a very popular stand had he commended the bill and avowed himself willing to co-operate in its passage; but he allowed himself to follow the prompting of parties to the fear of making political capital for the government. Mr. Maxwell, ever a zealous advocate of the labor cause, welcomed the bill with enthusiasm, and assured the government that it would be a most acceptable one to the great mass of the people. Mr. McMillen said it was quite evident that the government had taken the wind out of the opposition sails, and hence Mr. Foster's anger. He touched the conciliation bill, but the explanation was found fault with, he said, the postmaster-general had not given information. It was quite clear that Mr. Foster was sorely perplexed to find grounds for criticism when he addressed himself to such a satisfactory bill. He would have taken a very popular stand had he commended the bill and avowed himself willing to co-operate in its passage; but he allowed himself to follow the prompting of parties to the fear of making political capital for the government. Mr. Maxwell, ever a zealous advocate of the labor cause, welcomed the bill with enthusiasm, and assured the government that it would be a most acceptable one to the great mass of the people. Mr. McMillen said it was quite evident that the government had taken the wind out of the opposition sails, and hence Mr. Foster's anger. He touched the conciliation bill, but the explanation was found fault with, he said, the postmaster-general had not given information.
