night, cold and nearly worn out with a hard day's travel, he sought the nearest hotel, anxious to get his supper and retire to rest as soon as possible.

As he stepped up to the desk to register he ran his eye down the page of the book, as was his custom, to ascertain what other arrivals there had help that what other arrivals there had been that Almost instantly his glance was arrested by a name that sent a sudden thrill through his nerves.

He thought that his eyesight must have played him a trick, and he closed his eyes a moment to rest them before looking again.

No, there it was yet-only a half-dozen lines above his own, that name written in a plain, bold, handsome chirography there was no mistaking—"Maxwell D. "How strange!" Max said to himself.

"Can it be a mere coincidence, or is the man some distant relative of the family? I must see this individual, if for nothing I must see this individual, it for nothing more than to gratify my curiosity."

He was to remain in Madison the next day, for he had business with two or three firms in the city, and he made up his mind that he would solve the riddle and ascertain who this other Maxwell D. Remington was, before he did anything the morning; tonight he was too weary for anything but rest.

In less than half an hour, with his inner man well replenished, he retired to his room, where he sat down before a cheerful fire in the grate to look over. accounts for the day before going to

It must have been an hour later when he was suddenly aroused by a vigorous knock upon the door.

He arose to open it, and found the hotel clerk standing without.

"Ah! I am glad that you have not retired," the man said; and searching his face with an anxious look, Max thought.

Then he asked:
"Did you expect to find a relative here upon your arrival tonight?"
"No, sir," Max replied; "I have not

"No, sir," Max responded; "but I was surprised to find my own name written a few lines above where I registered to-night, and intended to seek the individnal tomorrow morning and ascertain how he happened to be called Maxwell D. "I am sorry that I disturbed you, then," said the clerk, but with a per-plexed and slightly troubled air; and was bout turning away when Max detained "Is there anything the matter? Pray tell me why you thought I might be a relative of this man."

"Certainly. An old gentleman arrived here early this afternoon; he looks to be nearly seventy, although he says he is barely sixty. He has evidently known better days—shows evidence of culture and of having mingled in good society; but he is sadly worn and broken by dis-sipation and fast living. Half an hour ago he had an alarming attack of something very like delirium tremens. When you registered this evening I was struck by the coincidence of the names, and imagined that you two must be relatives. and had met here by appointment; con-sequently I came to inform you of Mr. Remington's illness, and to get instruc-tions regarding what should be done for him, although a physician has already been summoned."

A sudden thought struck Max-a kind more quickly, and robbed his face of something of its color.
"I feel unaccountably interested in this man, who writes the same name that I do." he said, actuated by an inexplicable impulse, "and if I can be of any assistance in this emergency, pray command

'Thank you." his companion replied; then added: "Some one will have to stay with him during the night, and, as there with him during the night, and, as there seems to be no one else available. I have been detailed for that duty; but I was kept, awake all last night by illness in my own family, and I fear it will be impossible for me to give the man proper care; I fear I shall fall asleep if I attempt to stay with him all night."

"I will share the viell with you." May tempt to stay with him all night."

It seemed to weary Max, that he could not have slept more than half an hour, when he was awakened by a short, sharp tap, upon the door; but hastly dressing himself, he soon joined the clerk, and was immediately conducted to

"All right; sit over yonder, and mind that you don't stare at me," the invalid returned, pointing to a chair by the grate, as he sank back upon the pillow. Max obeyed him, but feeling far from comfortable, for he knew nothing about the care of sick people, and only his intense desire to learn something about this man, who called himself Maxwell D. Remington, had impelled him to share Remington, had impelled him to share the vigil of the clerk.

Mr. Ford gave him directions about some drops that were to be administered every hour until the man's exceeding nervousness abated, and then withdrew, leaving Max alone with the patient. He was very restless, and kept muttering to himself, apparently forgetting that there was anyone in the room with him.

Every few moments d of tremulous shudder would ruler him, and he kept working his half and fingers When Max arose, at the end of the hour, to give him his drops, he seemed suddenly to recall the fact of his pres-

"Ever since I was five years old."

"Why, Maxwell D. Remington, senior, your father to be sure."
"No; he died when I was an infant," the young man replied, not thinking it necessary to enlighten his companion upon the subject of his adoption, yet he wondered at his questioning so keenly. He was even more surprised at what "And you are heir to all his money, I

"And you are heir to all his money, I suppose? He had a pretty plum, too," the sick man remarked, his tone a trifle bitter, as if he felt injured that Max should have inherited this money. He seemed to have forgotten all about his illness, in the eager interest he manifested in his young attendant.

"Yes," Max returned, "he was worth a good deal when he died."

"No, sir; but I am afraid you are talking too much. Suppose you try to sleep for a little while, and if, as you say, we are relatives, we will talk about the connection tomorrow morning."

He did not credit what the man had told him; he thought it might be some vagary of his disordered brain, superinduced, perhaps, by the strange identity of names.

You may keep on giving me those drops for a while, then after an hour or so if you'll let me have a little sip of rum I'll go off as easy as a child. But, meantime, I'd like to talk with you a little more. It's queer we should meet like this, and the shock of it has braced me up wonderfully. So you never knew that your father had a cave with who once upon a time stood as cousin who, once upon a time, stood as good a chance to get his grand-uncle's fortune?" he concluded, inquiringly.

We've wated 'em at chess,

We've humbled 'em, I guess.

About the next big fight of consequence which will arouse the sporting world is the battle between Terry Mc-Govern and Young Corbett. McGovern is exhibiting at the Lyceum Theater in Philadelphia, where he is meeting one of the crack boxers of the town each night, and so far very successfully. He feels certain of victory when they do meet, but some of the best judges of pugilism are not so sanguine. They look upon Young Corbett as being younger and fresher than the ex-champion, and they feel certain that when they do meet Corbett will be again the victor. Terry will leave no stone unturned to get in the best possible fix, and it may be that he will be able to reverse the verdict of the previous battle. His future lies wholly and solely in the result of this contest. He has been a very proud young fellow in his time, and it is said that he is one of the wealthiest

Luck may not win or lose in baseball, but the record of Pitcher Siever of the Detroit Americans, formerly of ship games, and prior to Tuesday the only one that he was able to capture he got through shutting out his opponents, Chicago. In three games that he has been beaten, the total runs made by opposing teams was eight, his own side being unable to score at all in two games, and getting but one run in the other. He has beaten Chicago twice, and his own side, in these two games, made more runs than both sides together in the entire three games that he lost. Tuesday's third inning made it look as if he was about to lose another tough one, but his team's timely sticking and Garvin's It Makes Them Feel as Easy and wildness enabled him to put this one

There is much debating being done just now over the question of whether or not live bird shooting is inhuman. In Jersey the legislature has decided that the action is cruel, and down east generally public sentiment forces the trap shooters to use inanimate targets. The question came up in a Chicago court this week, three men who participated in a live bird shoot being arrested on a charge of cruelty. One, whose case will be made a test, was fined $10, Judge Hall deciding the action to be a cruel one. The higher court will be asked for a final decision.

LACROSSE. THE C. L. A. JUNIOR SERIES. Ingersoll, Ont., May 15.-The committee for No. 8 district, C. L. A., junior series, met here yesterday afternoon and adopted the following schedule: June 9, Ingersoll at Brantford; June 23, Brantford at London; July 9, London at Ingersoll; July 23, Brantford at Ingersoll; Aug. 9, London at Brantford; Aug. 14, Ingersoll at London. The representatives of the three clubs were: Dan McLean, Brantford; Chas. Fleming, Ingersoll; W. O'Brien, London, and the convener, Mr. Somers, of Ingersoll. J. M. Cameron, of the St. Cathar-Ines Athletic Lacrosse Club executive, is in the city, says the Toronto World, and talks glowingly of the prospects of his team for the coming summer. He named over the list of St. Kitts players, all home-brewed, except Mc-Lean and Cornett, of Shelbourne, who may not make the team, and declares that St. Kitts team will make even Brantford hustle, with their Dade and Henry. Mr. Cameron thinks the Tecumsehs on paper look none too strong, but on the whole expects a great season for the C. L. A., and some het games in the senior series. Athletic availables are as follows: Goal, Dixon, Bowman; point, Lobb; cover, Devlin; defense, Elliott, Richardson, Harris, C. Downey, Chaplin, center, G. Downey; home, Gourlay, McLean, Cornett. If the C. A. A. U. is going into the investigating business it looks to have a nice summer's work cut out.

Woodstock Sentinel-Review: Since London has published its lacrosse club line-up the team does not look as formidable as it did in the comments of the Forest City papers. Although the names of nineteen men appear on the list, we are not as yet sure whether London has secured them all or not. As regards the men being qualified to play in senior company that idea is questionable. The five players whom London obtained from Point St. Charles are intermediates only. They have yet to play in the senior league. Taken all around we would conclude from the line-up that Taken all around we London must yet strengthen considerably before it can hope to land the championship of District No. 2 O. L.

Toronto, May 15 .- There was the biggest crowd of the year at the Woodyesterday. The weather was fine and the track fast. The star performance was furnished by Robert Davies' plater Opuntia, when he established a new record for the year for a candidate for the guineas. Running over the course he will have to cover on race day, Opuntia went the full plate distance in 2:161/2. He carried full weight -at least 123 pounds-and had something left at the finish. Parisian Lady, whose form has been fancied by a great number, stayed with him for a mile and then shut up like a jackknife. although Jockey McGuade rode her vigorously to the wire, which she reached in 2:20½, many lengths behind Opuntia. George Hendrie's plater, Caller Herrin', worked the plate distance in 2:18 flat, about 11:30 o'clock. Cherry Wild and Wire-In carried her along to the mile in 1:48½. She finished well, but was nearly through at the wire. Dyment's Easy Street did the fastest work of the day, his mile in 1:46% being exceedingly well done. Belcourt, La Gazelle and Miss Hanover brought up the rear.

WESTERN DIPLOMACY. The Los Angeles sports, to convince Bob Fitzsimmons that they are not partial to Jefferies, met the lanky Cornishman with a band at the depot. He was accorded all the courtesies of the occasion. The Twentieth Century Club, which tried hard to get Fitz to meet Jefferies, were the prime movers in this reception to the former champion. McCOY'S EXPECTATIONS. Kid McCoy has postponed his fight with Kid Carter in Philadelphia until May 19 so that he can get in proper shape to meet the Brooklyn middle-weight. When McCoy fought Fred Russell in Philadelphia about a week ago he was in very poor condition. He had trained but little for the bout, and not only lacked his usual shiftiness, but was badly winded before the six rounds were over. The Kid, believing that Carter would give him a much warmer argument than the lumbersome Russell, very wisely concluded to take a couple of weeks' time for training before going into the ring with the youngster from the City of Churches. From a friend of McCoy's it has been of a mile, made him a close second choice in the betting yesterday, and he learned that the Kid's sole ambition is to work himself back into public favor once more and to that end he will prepare faithfully for all future contests. NEVER FORGOT HIS COUNTRY. Hamilton Herald: The untimely death of Archie McEachren, which occurred at Atlantic City, N. J., will be learned with deep regret by a host of friends of the unfortunate cyclist in this city. McEachren has frequently spent days at a time in Hamilton, with his partner and pace-maker, Bobby Thompson, and was always assisted the latter in preparing for boxing bouts in which the latter was locally engeged. McEachren was quiet, gentlemanly fellow with a happy faculty for making friends. He had worked his way into a prominent position in the cycling world, and his prowess at the long-distance game had earned of him a snug fortune. Though Archie had acquired his reputation and fortune across the border, he never forgot that he was a Canadian, and in all his prominent races were the colors of

SLAVERY DAYS

Authentic Reports State Positively That Slavery Still Exist in Canada.

Thousands Are Bound Hand and Foot and Punished Terribly-The Tortures of the Inquisition

Outdone, The days of slavery are not yet over. True the buying and selling of black men and women as cattle is abolished, but there are still many thousands who are bound in an awful bondage and who daily suffer punishment greater than ever the average slave had to endure. Dyspepsia is the task master whom these poor unfortunates are bound, and a cruel master he is.

Lashed to desperation by his awful punishment, many have sought liberty in death, preferring suicide to further torture. But a Great Deliverer has appeared, and is striking off the shackles from all who would be free. Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets have made old King Dyspepsia totter on his throne, and have snatched many a victim from his ruthless clutches. Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets by their timely aid have saved many a life from dispair and death. Into the very heart of this hitherto unconquerable old monarch's realm have Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets strode as a conquering hero to whom many for deliverance.

And no poor Dyspeptic Slave has ever turned to Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets for emancipation in vain.
