Ate Himself Thin.

A terribly emaciated man, about thirty-five years of age, was eating four meals a day, including a heavy breakfast. He was also taking milk between meals. I induced him to give up the milk between meals and to take only a cup of weak tea for breakfast. At once his weight began to increase. It is now normal. Obviously it was a case not only of ordinary mental worry, but also of worry and overwork of the millions of cell lives within him. He gave the cells and organs a rest and at once there was a storage of energy and weight.—Metropolitan Magazine.

Convicts as Hangmen.

According to a fetter written from concepts, published in the Berliner Tageblatt, there are some prisons in that country in which men condemned to death are held which have no regularly appointed hangmen. The executioner is selected from among the convicts. The man who is so fortunate as to be appointed receives 25 rubles for each execution and a credit of six months on his sentence period. One convict had nearly worked off his term and had accumulated a handsome sum of money when the governor of the prison appointed another hangman. "Between dull business and competition, the senior executioner's term dragged along, but finally came to an end, and he went forth freed and comfortably rich," the correspondent reports.

THREE TIMES AND OUT.

When a Girl Quit Telling of Her Sad Break.

Just before high school closed Bertha's English teacher had a party for his star class in themes. Every one was delighted, for the teacher was the idol of the class. Bertha was particularly pleased, for there she would see two good friends, Egbert and Mac, and she would have a partectly splendld time—she knew she would.

Happily one, Egbert by name, asked if he might inke her to the party, and she consented, reluctantly, of course, just for policy's sake.

That night at the party Bertha was having a gay time with her classmarks, the two boys in particular.

In the partor conversation fulled, and in an effort to free themselves from any responsibility they sought the porch as a retreat.

They sat in the soft light and chatted in low tones. Suddenly they stopped falking. They were conscious of some one's approach on the walk in front of them. They were silent.

some one's approach on the walk in front of them. They were silent. A queer looking woman, very pe-culiarly dressed, passed by. Bertha was impressed by the wom-an's oddity, and so for want of some-thing better to say she remarked; "Well, I wonder who that crazy freak is!"

Mac was silent a moment, then re-"That was my mether."
They didn't know what to say, so she suggested that they go in the house house.

Many years passed. Bertha moved west and didn't see Mac after that night. One evening she and her sister called on a friend in the yillage that called on a friend in the village that she now called home.

A nephew of the hostess was visiting her.

She introduced the girl to him, but Bertha didn't catch his name. In some way they began to talk about "hreaks," and Bertha began to tell about the terrible one she made years ago when she was in high school.

She noticed that the boy looked rather queer, but she paid no attention and continued with her story. When she had finished the nephew spoke up and said.

"Yes it was my better to witer."

said:

"Yes, it was my brother to whom you said that."

The lad had recognized the story and Bertha's name.

A month later Bertha was on the train and met an elderly gentieman, who told her his name. It was the same as that of the nephew, but Bertha didn't connect them. It was the name that reminded her of the funny, and yet sad breaks she had made to the brothers.

Never dreaming that this man was associated with or related to the same family, she proceeded to tell the stories.

"Yes, I remember hearing the boys tell about it. It was my wife of whom you spoke."

And they laughed heartly at the very peculiar coincidence, but Bertha was careful after that and never fold of the breaks again, but

The News by Windmill.

In certain parts of Holland births, marriages and deaths are frequently announced by the windmills instead of in the newspapers. When a miller gets married he stops his mill with the arms of the wheel in an oblique position and with the sails antoried. His friends and guests often do like wise with their mills in token of the ceremony. To indicate a birth the wheel is stopped with the arms in a slanting position, but at a more acute angle than for a marriage and with the two upper sails unfurled. Should a miller die the sails of his mill are all furled and the wheel is turned round until the arms assume an upright cross, in which position they are left until after the funeral has taken place.—Harper's Weckly.
