he set out from Plymouth. The hurricane was one of the most terrible recorded in history, and among other damage it swept away every vestige of the lighthouse, those in it, of course, being lost. Within three years another was built, known as Rudyard's, and, like Winstanley's, of wood.

The obvious occurred after an existence of forty-seven years, it being utterly destroyed by conflagration. The next-Smeaton's-was of stone and lasted until 1881, a period of 120 years, when it was found that it was being undermined and a new structure, the present and fourth, was erected on an adjacent rock. Smeaton's tower was rebuilt on Plymouth Hoe, where can be seen the original candle chandelier and the gongs operated by clockwork to keep awake the drowsy keepers, so that they should snuff the candles at proper intervals.

In medieval times the usual flluminant was a coal or wood fire in an open grate, which gave a fairly good light on a breezy night. For beacons on rocks at sea candles were used. In 1729 oil was first employed, and in 1790 the Argand circular wick lamp with silvered reflectors was introduced. Gas was first experimented with in 1817. The lights not only warn the mariner of the proximity of the shore, but also give him a clew as to where he is. This is chiefly done by dimming or "shuttering" of the light for a few sec-

Newton's Fearful Crime

At the end of a meal at Haydon's house Keats proposed a toast in these terms: "Dishonor to the memory of Newton."

The guests stared at him in question ing surprise, and Wordsworth asked for an explanation.

"It is," answered Keats, "because he destroyed the poetry of the rainbow by reducing it to a prism." And the artists all drank, with one consent, confusion to the savant.
