BISHOP'S COLLEGE SCHOOL, Lennoxville.

Bishop's College School, a Photogravure of which appears in this issue of the DIOCESAN GAZETTE, together with another of the Chapel Choir, has been identified with the University at Bishop's College for the last fifty-two years, but was in existence as a private enterprise, for about eight years previous to the founding of the College in 1845.

A number of English families had settled in the Townships during the early thirties, and, as the want of a good school was badly felt, the Reverend Lucius Doolittle, Rector of Lennoxville, resolved to start such an institution himself. Accordingly we find that as early as 1838 boys were coming to Lennoxville to be educated.

In 1841 Mr. Edward Chapman came to the school as Mr. Doolittle's Assistant, and he appears to have taken full charge in the following year, and to have remained as Rector until 1845, when the school was taken over by the College as its Junior Department, and Professor H. H. Miles was appointed in his place. There is still living, in the person of the Reverend Thos. Chapman, of Marbleton, one of Mr. Doolittle's first pupils, and the following extract from a letter of that gentleman, in which he describes the first school-house, is of interest:

"The building was some 30 x 45 feet. The first storey contained store-rooms chiefly: the second the school-room and the Rector's study and library, and the roof part, popularly called the "steamboat," was finished off for a dormitory.

There were no bedsteads, only board berths, and the boys lay along each side, feet to head, with only an inch board between.

The only light and ventilation we had came from the two ends of the aforesaid "steamer."

It would be beyond the limits of this necessarily brief note to sketch the history of the School from its primitive state, as described by Mr. Chapman, to the present day, when we occupy a large modern building fitted with every appliance for the safety and comfort of the boys, but one name I cannot pass over, that of the great Rector, the Reverend James Williams, late Bishop of Quebec, who, by his wonderful gifts as a school-master, raised Bishop's College School from its status as a mere local institution to such a position in the educational world as to attract boys from all over Canada and the United States—a position which, we are proud to say, it still occupies.

Dr. Williams was Rector for six years only: he began with eight boys, and when he resigned there were
